The Kansas Question---The Position of Senator Douglas.

Government Finances---The Proposed Issue of Treasury Notes.

Dispatches from Col. Johnson, of the Utah Expedition.

Mr. Belmont and the Mission to Spain—The Cuban Question—Filibustering—The Paris Mission, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 18.

A caucus of the Democratic Senators was held to-day, on the Printer and Committees. It was suspected that an effort would be made there to read DOUGLAS out of the party, by appointing some other gentleman Chairman of the Committee on Territories. A Senator opposed to him, however, denies any such effort, and says that DOUGLAS was treated with profound respect. The Committee on Territories, however, was agreed to be so constituted as to leave him in the minority.

It is evident that the fight is to be a fierce one, and that the President is determined to oppose DOUGLAS' position to the bitter end. DOUGLAS will beat them, however, at last.

It is stated in confidential circles that the Democratic delegation from Indiana have had a long interview with the President, in the course of which they said that in full consultation they could not support the Lecompton Constitution, after the exposé of Senator DOUGLAS. There can be no doubt that such a consultation was held.

The Government telegraphed in every direction to-day to find Governor WALKER, but without avail.

MARTIN, the Secret Agent of the Administration, has returned to Kansas with Gen. DENVER.

The course of Mr. DOUGLAS continues to be the subject of much excited discussion. That he is to be read out of the Democratic Party without the benefit of clergy, seems to be the determination of every supporter of the Administration.

The hostility with which he is pursued you would scarcely credit. He has clearly committed the unpardonable sin in the estimation of the South; but by the time a month has rolled around those who pursue him will find the Democratic Party ridiculously small if all who think and act with him are expelled from it.

Mr. DOUGLAS is not so easily slaughtered. He possesses the recuperative power of a dozen ordinary politicians, or he would have been in his political grave long since. He now occupies in the Democratic Party something of the position which Governor SEWARD had in the ruling party at a time when he was urged to abandon it because it seemed likely to be used for the extension of the Slave Power.

Mr. S. declined, insisting upon his duty to remain in the party and exert his influence for its reformation. Mr. DOUGLAS will assume the same attitude in the Democratic Party; and whether he succeeds or not as well as did the Senator from New-York, he will, at least, command respect for the energetic boldness of his effort.

The Secretary of the Treasury hopes to be able to perfect his detailed and specific plan for the issue of Treasury notes within a few days. Mr. COBB has, if he chooses to avail of it, an opportunity greatly to aid the domestic exchanges of the country, by obtaining from Congress authority to receive deposits of specie at the different Sub-Treasuries, and issue Mint certificates in sums not less than an hundred dollars each. This would enable the surplus of specie in New-York to be used at once for the benefit of the interior.

Such authority was provided in the original Sub-Treasury bill, but stricken out in the Senate. The want of it has been severely felt in the late pressure, when the Government was frequently importuned to allow deposits of this character, but lacked the power to receive them.

The Standing Committees of the House of Representatives are expected to be announced on Monday next. Weighty influences are at work to defeat, if possible, the arrangement which I announced last week giving the Chairmanship of the Committee on Ways and Means to Mr. PHELPS, and that on Foreign Relations to Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania.

That the arrangement was made, cannot be denied; but its precise form probably differs a little from what is generally supposed. It is not certain that Mr. ORR in terms agreed to appoint the two gentlemen named: but he agreed to let the President name the Chairmen of the two Committees in question, leaving Mr. BUCHANAN to inform Mr. PHELPS that he should be Chairman of the one, and Mr. JONES the Chairman of the other.

Mr. CLINGMAN, of North Carolina, aspires to be Chairman of Foreign Relations, and every effort will be made to secure him the place.

Another reason why the President desires that Mr. JONES should receive this position, may be found in the fact that he looks upon him as his prospective Minister to England, to succeed Mr. DALLAS.

The feeling in favor of calling out volunteers from the Pacific coast, to aid in suppressing the Mormon rebellion, is very decided here. Should volunteer regiments be authorized, it is not improbable that General LANE, of Oregon, will be offered the command of them.

AUSTIN SMITH, of San Francisco, son of "Extra Billy" SMITH, of Virginia, will probably be appointed Naval Officer at the former place, vice ASHE, the present incumbent. S.

[FROM THE REPORTER FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 11.

Senator BIGLER, in order to correct misapprehension, states in conversations, that the meeting to which he alluded in his speech of Wednesday, as having taken place in the rooms of Mr. DOUGLAS last year, to consult on the Toombs Kansas bill, was an official rather than a private meeting of the Committee on Territories, and to which other Senators had been invited.

Judge BUTLER'S death according to the present understanding among Senators, will be announced on Monday, and that of Mr. BELL, of New-Hampshire, on Tuesday.

The Democratic Senatorial Caucus, to-day, agreed on the Standing Committees. Senator MASON, of Virginia, is to continue as the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; Senator DOUGLAS, of Illinois, as the Chairman of the Committee on Territories; Senator HUNTER, of Virginia, as the Chairman of the Committee on Finance; Senator STUART, of Michigan, as Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands; Senator BAYARD, of Delaware, as Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary; Senator BROWN, of Mississippi, as Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia; and Senator YULEE, of Florida, as Chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices.

An effort was made to elect new officers of the Senate, but the proposition was postponed.

The subject of Public Printer will come up in caucus next Monday. Much interest is manifested concerning it.

Dispatches were received from Col. JOHNSTON at the War Department to-day, dated South Pass, Oct. 18. They include several letters from Col. ALEXANDER, at present commanding the main body of the army in Utah. He, it appears, questions, by the hesitation with which he assumes it, his right to execute fully all the duties of Commander, but Col. JOHNSTON thinks his authority to exercise them without restriction, is clearly granted. Col. JOHNSTON says Col. ALEXANDER, in pursuance of the latter's design, had advanced up to Ham's Fork, of Green River, thirty-five miles above the crossing, and there directed the movements to be made by his own immediate command and the troops to form a junction, which from erroneous suppositions would be wholly impracticable. Col. JOHNSTON continues:

"Col. SMITH is at this camp, with fifty men of his regiment. I overtook him on the 16th, about twenty miles east of this, and have added my escort of fifteen dismounted dragoons to his force. Lieut. SMITH, in command of a squadron of dragoons and fifty men of the tenth infantry (a force of about two hundred men) may be expected here in three or four days. He is aware of the necessity of promptness, and I am sure will lose no time. Col. MAGRAW, Superintendent of the South Pass Road, with patriotism highly creditable to him, places at the disposition of the Government as many of his employes as will volunteer. He thinks fifty or sixty will organize, and I have agreed to accept their services and have mustered them in for three or six months, as they may select, and he has also tendered fifteen good teams of mules and wagons, which I have also accepted, and directed them to be receipted for when delivered. Four supply trains containing clothing, of which the troops now on the advance I am informed begin to need, and ordnance, medical and subsistence stores are still in the rear and may be expected in two or three days. The storm of last night may have destroyed some of their oxen, and on that account there may be more delay than I estimate. Eleven mules of Col. SMITH'S train perished from cold last night. The thermometer this morning at sunrise was sixteen degrees above zero. The sky is now clear and the thermometer (one o'clock) is at thirty-four. The small quantity of snow that fell during the night is melting, so the animals can graze freely. I am thus minute for the reason that the order to Col. ALEXANDER yesterday morning may be fully comprehended. His intended movement, if met with opposition, would have so retarded his march as to have made it impracticable, and would have so probably entangled him in the midst of the deep snow of the valley of Bear River, which, I understand, never fails to fall there, and usually early in the season, as to place him beyond the means of extrication. Our most potent enemy at present is the snow, and constitutes at present our chief embarrassment. The movement of Colonel ALEXANDER would have separated him from supplies indispensable to the comfort and safety of the army, and deprived him of the assistance of the force which will be concentrated here in a few days, which, however small, being partly of cavalry, is of vital importance. In ordering Col. ALEXANDER to the mouth of Fonteville Creek, a position about 30 miles from his camp on Ham's Fork, I did so with the design of making a junction practicable. It is about 70 miles hence. He can reach it by a good road, and without any danger of surprise. There is, at that place, an abundance of grass, and it is a point from which I can reach the region I intend to occupy this Winter without risking the loss of our animals. As soon as snow falls sufficiently on Green River, to prevent burning the grass, I will march to Henry's Fork and occupy that valley. During the Winter it is a commanding position, and is accessible two months earlier for reinforcements and supplies, by Cheyenne Pass, than any other, and it will enable me to reach Fort Bridger and go on to the most direct route to Salt Lake City as soon as practicable in the Spring. At this position also Colonel COOK can join me, which I still entertain the hope he will be able to do. I greatly regret the impossibility of concentrating the troops destined for this service and their supplies, which will prevent a forward movement till Spring. It is now manifest before the force can be united, Autumn will be too far advanced to move with the probability of success, though not opposed by the Mormons.

He says in conclusion:

I will, however, mention that unless a large force is sent here, from the nature of the country, a protracted war on the part of the Mormons is inevitable. The great distance from our source of supply makes it impracticable to operate with a small force. It, in fact, requires the employment of such a force to guard the numerous trains of supplies, leaving but a small portion, if any, for offensive operations. A movement of troops from California, Oregon, and by this route, would terminate the war with the Mormons speedily, and more economically than if attempted by insufficient means. In five or six days, I think, we will have all the force available here for such forward movement. By that time the trains will all be up. They should be here sooner. In twelve days from this time I expect to join Colonel ALEXANDER, at or near Fontenelle Creek. The General may be assured that no retrograde movement will be made by this force."

This document bears the indorsement of Lieut.-Gen. SCOTT, cordially approving of Col. JOHNSTON'S conduct. As to the expedition from the Pacific he is, however, confident that the Colonel is not aware of the difficulties which would attend it, and it is the opinion of the Commander-in-Chief that Col. JOHNSTON can be reinforced earlier and far more effectually, this side.

The amount in the Treasury subject to draft is less than $6,000,000. The receipts for the week ending the 7 h inst. were $550,000.

There will be no new appointment of Commissioner of Indian affairs, as it is understood that General DENVER will resume the office after he shall have accomplished his mission to Kansas.

Our Washington Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Dec. 10, 1857.

The President finds the feeling against appointing Mr. BELMONT United States Minister to Spain, very decided in certain qualities. Members of the Cabinet have been engaged within the last few weeks, to my certain knowledge, in efforts to prepare the way for his nomination; but the doubt of his confirmation, now that the Administration is so weak in the Senate, is so great, that the probabilities are against the effort. Still the idea is not abandoned; and if the times should prove more propitious, the late Minister at the Hague will yet be transferred to Madrid. There are those in your City who could abundantly confirm all I have written on this subject if they chose so to do. Mr. BUCHANAN'S heart is set upon having Mr. BELMONT in the mission, because he considers him better fitted than any one else at this time to advance his views with reference to the acquisition of Cuba.

You cannot have overlooked the prominence which the President, in his Message, has given to our relations with Spain. The special energy with which he enforces the duty of exacting reparation from that Government for wrongs suffered at its hands by American citizens, is the more significant when contrasted with the entire silence of the Executive in relation to the mass of equally meritorious cases pending between our citizens and the Republic of Mexico. It is not difficult to perceive that in the case of Spain the President is actuated by some impelling motive which does not appear upon the surface, and deductions may fairly be drawn sustaining the ideas which I have heretofore advanced, in relation to the President's purpose of making another effort for the acquisition of Cuba.

The President's position in regard to WALKER'S movement against Central America attracts a good deal of attention among Southern and Southwestern men, and the more because they consider it unnecessarily inconsistent with his Ostend Conference doctrines, and with assurances of sympathy which he gave to Mr. SOULE some months ago. The effect, they say, will be to raise a strong party against the President in the South and Southwest, which will strike, in return, at the President's friends, and so thwart his policy whenever opportunity is afforded. The removal of the District-Attorney at New-Orleans, because of his consent to WALKER'S release on $2,000 bail, and the specific censure of that officer for so doing in the Message, adds to the offence, and greatly exasperates a body of bold, earnest and influential men.

All this is the more important, because of its relations to the appointment of a Minister to France. I reassert that the President long ago determined on the appointment of Mr. SLIDELL to the Paris Mission, when he was expected to induce LOUIS NAPOLEON to exert his influence upon the British Government in the matter of the Spanish debt, and thus arrange so that in the event of a sale of Cuba to the United States, Great Britain should not insist upon the immediate payment of all her claims, and so swallow up the entire sum we pay for Cuba at once.

This effected, so that Spain could feel that she was getting something for her island in hand, not to be immediately absorbed by debt, Mr. BELMONT as Minister to Spain, with the influence of the ROTHSCHILDS to back him, and the pressure of the United States for an instant settlement of their claims,—such as the President hints at—to enforce his demands,—was expected to negotiate a cession of Cuba! The premature disclosure of a part of this programme by the TIMES some weeks since has embarrassed, if not defeated, the scheme, at least so far as the agency of Mr. BELMONT is concerned. The President's position on the fillibuster question bids fair to lose the services of Mr. SLIDELL in the same connection,—and thus:

Mr. SLIDELL has never consented to accept the Paris Mission, nor has he refused it. If he can be sure of having his seat in the Senate filled by a personal and political friend—Hon. JOHN M. SANDIDGE, for instance—he will accept the Mission to France; if not, not. The Democratic opposition in Louisiana is headed by his rival, PIERRE SOULE, who is also head and front of the Walker fillibuster movement. As this movement is highly popular in Louisiana, the President's friends are greatly injured by whatever move he makes adverse to it, and the Soulé party is strengthened in the same proportion. The President's zealous committal against WALKER'S expedition in his Message, his removal of the District-Attorney at New-Orleans, and the understanding or suspicion that WALKER'S arrest in New-Orleans was effected through the agency of a Federal Officer there, appointed on Mr. SLIDELL'S recommendation, and therefore supposed to be under his influence—all tend to weaken Mr. SLIDELL'S influence at home, whether justly or not; so that it is considered extremely doubtful whether, if he should resign, Mr. SOULE, or some other fillibuster rival, would not be elected to the vacancy. Indeed, if it shall turn out that WALKER reached Central America in safety, and has reëstablished himself there, it is believed that Mr. SLIDELL'S vacancy would certainly be filled by a political or personal rival or enemy. Under these circumstances, it is not probable that Mr. SLIDELL will risk a resignation to accept the Paris Mission, even at the earnest solicitation of the President. This may be depended upon as the precise position of this whole Mission question at present.

Gentlemen, recently arrived here from Kansas, confirm the statement that HENRY L. MARTIN was a secret agent of the Administration there, to counteract the effort of Governor WALKER, in behalf of a full submission of the Constitution to the people of the Territory. They say that the Governor had secured a clear majority of the Convent on in favor of the submission, when MARTIN arrived, and, by his semi-official representations as the attorney of the President, influenced the course finally resolved upon—or, rather, induced the Calhoun Party in convention to present to the Elmore Party the alternative of a submittal of the Slavery clause alone, or the submittal of no part of the instrument.

A ludicrous error occurred in my letter published in Wednesday's TIMES, which I must beg leave to correct. I intended to state the prevailing impression that the election of STEADMAN as printer of the House would lead to the establishment of a Douglas organ in this city,—but am made to say "a Douglas and Wise" organ—a mixture about as impossible as that of oil and water.

Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Dec. 10, 1857.

The Senate is engaged in Executive session upon the nomination of General DENVER as Secretary of State for Kansas, in place of Mr. STANTON. The nomination of R. J. WALKER, as Governor of the Territory, will not be sent in.

The latest intelligence from Kansas fearfully complicates the question relating to that troublesome Territory. The Legislature elect were to meet and assume the direction of the Territorial Government, whether called by acting Governor STANTON or not. It is stated here, on reliable authority, that it is then proposed to arrest the action of the Lecompton Convention, and enact laws making it a penal offence to hold the Constitutional election which is to take place on the 21 instant.

Gen. DENVER has started on his mission to Kansas, but it is apprehended that he will not reach the Territory in time to exert his authority and influence for the maintenance of order. Governor WALKER has not been removed, but probably will not return to the Territory as Governor, inasmuch as he coincides with the popular feeling against the action of the Lecompton Convention.

Kansas is, therefore, or will be before the first of July next, in open rebellion against the United States Territorial Government. There will be a fearful crisis, though it was not unforeseen. Gov. WALKER advised the President that this would be the result.

It is for Congress to dispose of the question, in whatever form it may be presented. The view which I gave you, some days ago, as to the probable course of the President has been entirely verified. He has not recommended to Congress the adoption of the Lecompton Constitution, though he maintains the legality of the action of the Convention and intimates that the peace and quiet of the country will be promoted by the adoption of their Constitution. He does not touch at all upon the proper functions of legislation. The whole matter is subject to the disposal of Congress, which body "may admit new States." The revolutionary movement in Kansas is not calculated to aid Congress in coming to a wise conclusion on this subject.

BOSTON, Friday, Dec. 11.

Mr. JARVIS SLADE, a member of the firm of LAWRENCE, STONE & Co., who has been very ill at the residence of his brother-in-law, in Bath, Maine, attempted suicide, by cutting his throat, yesterday. It is feared that the wound will be mortal.

BOSTON, Friday, Dec. 11—P. M.

A dispatch from Bath this evening states that Mr. SLADE is alive and may recover. He had partially recovered from brain fever, and was insane when he attempted to make way with himself.

The Case of the Murderer Donnelly.

TRENTON, Friday, Dec. 11.

In the case of DONNELLY, for the murder of MOSES at the Sea View House, Highlands, the Court of Appeals this afternoon affirmed the judgment of the Supreme Court. The vote stood, for affirmance, 6; reversal, 3. Chancellor WILLIAMSON read an opinion favoring a reversal, and Judge OGDEN read another for the affirmance. Gov. PENNINGTON gave notice of an application to be made to the Court of Pardons, for a pardon or commutation of the sentence. This is now DONNELLY'S only hope, as he is sentenced to be executed on the 8th of January.

Kentucky United States Senatorship.

LOUISVILLE, Friday, Dec. 11.

The Senate of Kentucky, by a strict party vote, has tabled a resolution to elect a United States Senator in place of Hon. JOHN B. THOMPSON, on Tuesday next. This action will constitutionally postpone the election to the next Legislature.

The New-York Democracy on the Kansas Question.

From the Albany Argus, Dec. 11.

We are not disposed to underrate the present complications of the Kansas question and feel inclined, in company with our readers, to take an observation and see whether the good Democratic ship is really, as the Republican leaders so joyfully assert, rushing upon the breakers, and upon certain destruction.

During all the discussion over the Kansas controversy, from the first introduction of the Kansas bill by Mr. DOUGLAS, to the final triumph of the principle involved in it by the election of President BUCHANAN, the Democratic Party insisted that the subject of Slavery should be submitted for adjustment to the people of the Territory, and that they should determine the character of their domestic institutions. In the recent action in Kansas, this Democratic principle has been carried out so far as the Slavery question is concerned. Both President BUCHANAN and Senator DOUGLAS, and, in fact, all who have occasion to speak on the subject, agree on this point. All the male inhabitants of Kansas, over twenty-one years of age, have now an opportunity to say by their ballots whether they will or will not make Slavery one of their domestic institutions. Thus far, then, there is no serious difficulty, and if this were the whole action of the Kansas Constitutional Convention, there would be no room for controversy concerning its doings.

The President in his Message expresses his disappointment that the Convention did not submit the whole Constitution for popular ratification, and hopes that the example to that effect set in the Minnesota case may hereafter be followed. Senator DOUGLAS, and we think we may add the great mass of the Democratic Party, concur with the President in this feeling of regret over the action of the Convention on this point, and in the President's desire that the sound Democratic principle of general submission may be adopted as our future rule of action. On this point, therefore, there is no dissension between Democrats.

Whether, under all the circumstances, and notwithstanding the exceptionable action of the Convention in withholding a submission of the whole Constitution, Kansas should be admitted, is a question which will address itself to the sound discretion of Congress—which we trust will be exercised under the promptings of patriotic motives, and with a full appreciation of the consequences which it will involve. The President's Message makes no recommendation on this point. We are not surprised at this important omission in that able, conservative and well-considered document. It is difficult at this moment to determine what should be the action of Congress in this matter. Very important events are to transpire in Kansas within the next thirty days, and before the question of admission will be passed upon by Congress. They may be such as should be taken seriously into consideration in determining that question, and the President acted wisely in withholding any official expression of opinion until the whole case, as it will present itself to Congress, shall be disclosed and made up. On the 21st inst., the people of the Territory are to vote on the Slavery clause of the Constitution. On the 4th of January there is to be a general election, to choose officers preparatory to the organization of the State Government, at which a Governor, and other State officers, a Legislature and member of Congress, are to be elected. Both of these elections will transpire before Congress will come to any vote on the question of admission. We are aware that it may be urged that the admission involves a principle which should control and decide it, but we think it can hardly be denied that it is also a question of practical wisdom, the decision of which, as a matter of fact, and to a certain extent very properly, will be influenced by the indications of public opinion afforded by those elections.

Other events may occur in the Territory, and other evidences of popular feeling be furnished, which will deserve the consideration of Congress in deciding upon the question of admission. The telegraph just now brings us intelligence of one movement, the bearing of which may, or may not prove important. At least, it illustrates our position that it was wise for the President, that it is wise for all others in imitation of his example, to wait till the time of action arrives before making up a judgment. We allude to the report that Acting Governor STANTON called an extra session of the newly-elected Legislature, to convene on the 7th inst. That body, being hostile to the action of the Constitutional Convention, it is reported, will proceed (if it has not already) to repeal the law under which the Constitutional Convention was held—in the belief that thereby the whole action of the Convention will become nugatory. Should this be done, an interesting question will arise—whether after the people have acted under a Convention law in electing delegates and the Convention has performed its labors, the legislative power can step in, pending the question of a ratification of the Constitution, and arrest all further proceedings by a repeal of the law? This point may be one which will enter into the formation of the Congressional judgment on the subject of admission.

It is quite too soon for the Republican press to assume that the Democrats in Congress are to be seriously divided, or that their views are to come in collision with those of the President, on this question. It is entirely possible that, when the time for action arrives, the subject may be disposed of with much unanimity of opinion. So far as opinions may be influenced by the bearing of Slavery, or of party politics, upon the question of admission, there is ample room for change of sentiment before the time for Congressional action will arrive. To illustrate what is possible, let us suppose that the Slavery clause will be voted down on the 21st inst.; and that the Free-State party will carry the election on the 4th of January. Then the question presented to Congress, will be the admission of Kansas as a Free State, with one Republican Representative in the House, and two Republican Senators in the Senate, and with the Republicans in possession of the State Government. Will it surprise any one who bears in mind the infirmity of human nature, to find under such a state of things, the eagerness of Pro-Slavery men for admission sensibly abating, and the zeal of Abolitionists and Republicans against admission, suddenly cooling. The next thirty days may materially change the aspect of this question and possibly reverse the positions of the present contestants in relation to it.

The practical moral, which is obvious from the views which we have presented, is that there is no occasion for haste—especially on the part of Democrats—in rushing into controversy on this question of admitting Kansas under the Lecompton Constitution, and that, on the contrary, there is much wisdom in reserving our opinions on that subject until the precise case to be decided is disclosed. So far as we are concerned, we are quite willing to endure the taunts of political friends and foes who seek to precipitate themselves and us into premature, and perhaps unnecessary controversy, until the full facts upon which Congress is to act are before the public. Until that time arrive, we are not such amateur combatants as to care to indulge in the amusement of exchanging blows with friend or foe.

TICKET SWINDLING.—CHARLES W. FRANKLIN, from Boston, bound to Liverpool, was on Thursday victimised by a fellow giving his name as GEORGE WOOD, and holding forth at No. 109 West-street. WOOD sold FRANKLIN a worthless piece of paper as a ticket by the steamer Kangaroo for $45. Upon discovering the fraud, he made complaint at the office of the Detective Police. Sergeant LEFFERTS sent one of his officers, who arrested him and brought him up. He refunded the money and was let off, promising not to do so again. Yesterday, a poor man who had been egregiously defrauded in the price of tickets sold him for himself and family, made a complaint at the Police office. The offender was arrested, and proved to be the identical repentant WOOD. This time he was reprimanded, and let go again, after he had refunded the money. The man could not remain to prosecute.

The complimentary dinner tendered by the citizens of Albion to Comptroller Church was given on Tuesday evening. Judge BESSAC presided, and 250 persons were at table. Mr. Church made a speech in response to a complimentary toast.

Police Commissioners.

The Commissioners met yesterday at their office in Broome-street—Present, General NYE, (President,) Messrs. BOWEN, STRANAHAN, CHOLWELL, PERIT and Mayor POWELL.

The minutes of the last meeting of the Board having been read and confirmed,

General NYE submitted the following communication, which he had just received:

No. 46 MORTON-STREET.

General Jas. W. Nye, Office Metropolitan Commissioners, corner of Broome-street and Elm:

DEAR SIR: In this morning's Tribune I read that 800 poor are nightly applicants at the Station-house for lodging, that cannot be obtained.

At No. 120 West Broadway stands a building whose upper stories are vacant. In one angle of the building stands a large chimney some four or five feet square in the clear, with an iron smoke-pipe in its centre to rarify the surrounding air and thus create a powerful draught for ventilating purposes. The floors can all be readily heated and fitted up with bunks. It would afford me heartfelt satisfaction to know that I had done something to relieve the abounding wretchedness of our burdened City.

I offer the use of these apartments to the Commissioners for the Winter, free of charge. Will you do me the favor to communicate this matter to your Board, and oblige yours, very truly,

THADDEUS HYATT.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Dec. 11, 1857.

General NYE considered it would be better to wait until they heard from the Common Council respecting providing lodging-houses for the poor, before taking any action in this matter.

Mr. BOWEN was of the same opinion. From the report of the proceedings of the Common Council he perceived that their Committee were to report to the Board on the subject.

Mr. PERIT—From reading the report of the proceedings of the Council in the papers, I understood they were to refer it back to us.

Mr. STRANAHAN—They are to report back to us.

Upon the motion of Mr. PERIT the letter was referred to the Committee on Station-houses.

Mr. BOWEN moved a resolution requesting that the General Superintendent be authorized to submit to the Board the names of all officers detailed for special duty, also the names of all officers who were wounded whilst in the service and not able to do patrol duty, but competent to discharge special duty.

The resolution was carried.

Mr. CHOLWELL moved that Edwin H. Gow be appointed as care-taker of the house No. 88 White street, about being fitted up for the detention of witnesses in criminal cases.

Mr. PERIT—Are we not at present instituting inquiry as to what the expenses of that house will be?

Mr. CHOLWELL—The Committee have looked at the house. There is nothing to be done but to paint it, and place iron bars outside the windows.

General NYE observed that he was at a little loss to know how the expenses of fitting up that house were to be met or apportioned. The law was quite emphatic that the Commissioners should provide such a place separate from the prison, and prepare it out as to the expenditure they were to make, there was no provision for that.

Mr. BOWEN expressed a similar opinion. He was for fitting up such a house for the accommodation of witnesses, but he thought that other cities should bear an equal share in the expenses of fitting it up. For instance, Brooklyn. They could send over the warrant for the amount.

Mayor POWELL—You will have your warrant sent back. There is no fund there to pay it.

General NYE—Before this motion is decided, let the Committee report and inform us what the entire cost of fitting up this establishment will be.

Mr. BOWEN—And also where the funds are to come from to pay the amount.

The motion was then postponed.

Mr. STRANAHAN handed in reports of several trials of officers for offences. In the case of Francis McNeily, Ninth Precinct, Brooklyn, charged with abusive language, Mr. S. moved that he be dismissed the service.

Mayor POWELL, in moving as an amendment that McNeily should be suspended for 30 days, instead of dismissal, observed that the officer was a very good and efficient one. No doubt he was guilty of using violent and offensive language, but he was of opinion if the Committee looked into the evidence, they would find palliating circumstances in the case.

Mr. STRANAHAN referred to the evidence adduced, and had no doubt of the guilt of the accused. According to their rules he could do nothing but move that the officer be dismissed. He was guilty of most abusive language, and——

Mr. BOWEN—This vice of profane language and swearing by the the officers of this Department must be prevented. It is one of the vices of this Department.

Mayor POWELL—If you dismiss all that swear, you will not have a man left in the service.

The amendment was put and lost, and the original motion for dismissal carried.

General NYE submitted to the Board the testimony taken in the case of officer Tilden, charged with having arrested a woman and her husband, and locking them up without sufficient cause. After carefully examining the evidence in the matter he (Gen. NYE) was of opinion that the officer only discharged his duty faithfully, and he would move that the charge be dismissed, for if they did not sustain their officers, the officers could not sustain the law. He also presented the report of the trial of Adam F. Hallett, charged with fraud in receiving his pay twice, and forging a name on the pay-roll. Several of the Commissioners were present at that trial, and he considered he was speaking the sentiment of all when he moved that the charge should be dismissed.

Mr. BOWEN thought they should do something more in this case than merely declare that Hallett had been tried and not found guilty. It was due to the man to have it stated that they had several witnesses, tellers of one of the Banks, who examined the signatures and proved that Hallett was not the party who signed the roll.

The motions proposed by Gen. NYE were unanimously adopted.

Mr. CHOLWELL moved that the Treasurer be directed to pay the doormen at the Sixth Precinct.

Gen. NYE was of opinion that they should also be dismissed after the 1st of January.

The motion and Gen. NYE'S suggestion were adopted.

Gen. NYE—At our last meeting a proposition was submitted by several persons, whose names are reported as volunteers to serve as officers of this force, in the position of patrolmen, and take chance for their pay by being retained in the service. Since the last meeting I have been asked to bring this question before the Board and have its decision on the question, and I now submit it, as a decision may relieve us of one of the sources of annoyance.

Mr. CHOLWELL—I think it would get us into a great deal of trouble.

Gen. NYE—They stipulate and agree not to be any charge to the Department unless they are regularly employed.

Mayor POWELL—Are they members of the old force?

General NYE—No; persons who wish to join the new force.

Mr. PERIT—It would only embarrass us, I am afraid.

General NYE—I only wish the Board to come to some decision, that we may give these men a satisfactory answer.

Mr. CHOLWELL moved and Mayor POWELL seconded a resolution declining the services of the applicants. Carried.

Mr. BEBEE claimed the indulgence of the Committee for a few moments. He wished to address them on an old sore. As he had previously stated, he was the representative of some six or seven hundred members of the old Police, who were anxious to have the question decided whether they were legally discharged or not. It was of the utmost importance to the citizens of New-York, as well as to the Board, that the matter should be settled one way or other, and it struck him (Mr. B.) that they would have no difficulty if the Board would instruct their counsel to join with them, in agreeing to a case meeting all the facts on both sides, to put fairly before the Court, the main question, whether these men were properly dismissed or not. He also wished to inform the Board, should it agree to his suggestion, that there was every probability that the large number of men which he represented would be satisfied to abide by the decision of the Court, and the Board would have no further annoyance about the matter. He asked them as a special obligation to himself that they should agree on the facts, and instruct their counsel—

Mr. BOWEN—Is not there a case at present before our counsel?

General NYE—There is no difficulty in agreeing as to the facts: they are clear. Messrs. HALL, VANDERPOOL, and BROWN are at present engaged, in connection with a gentleman, Mr. DEVEREUX, in agreeing upon a case for Court.

Mr. BEBEE—Permit me to interrupt——

General NYE—Oh, no interruption. They are agreeing upon a case, and will have all the facts laid properly before Court.

Mr. BEBEE suggested that, probably, as Mr. DEVEREUX only represented one or two of the old Police, and might agree on a case with Messrs. BROWN, HALL, and VANDERPOOL, which would not meet the wishes of his clients, numbering 600, and as he had attended the investigations before the Committees touching his clients, he suggested, for the consideration of the Board, to prevent all further annoyance and expense, that it should instruct counsel to agree with him on a case for Court. He could only say for himself that the facts would be fairly stated, and that in a week or ten days, the whole question would be disposed of. After apologizing for the interruption, Mr BEBEE withdrew.

Mr. CHOLWELL—Who will we refer that to?

General NYE—In my opinion, it ought to be placed before a lawyer.

Mr. CHOLWELL then suggested that the matter should be placed in the hands of the Chairman, with power.

On motion of Mr. PERIT the Board resolved itself into secret session, and the room was cleared.

SEA AND SHIP NEWS.

WRECKS.

Two Vessels Ashore on Long Island—A Schooner and an Unknown Brig—Perilous Position of a Crew.

The topsail schooner Sarah C. Shields, from Philadelphia, bound to Boston, with a cargo of 300 tons of coal, ran ashore on Wednesday morning about 3 o'clock, during the prevalence of a dense fog, which prevented the Captain from seeing his position. The vessel fortunately struck within a quarter of a mile westward of the Life-boat Station No. 28, on Southampton Beach. A very heavy surf was running at the time, from the outer bar to the beach, and breaking all over the schooner. The wreck was discovered at daylight, when the persons in charge of the station assembled and took prompt measures to rescue the crew. A line was thrown over the vessel from the mortar, by aid of which a strong line was run from the ship to the beach. The life-boat was then launched, and at the imminent risk of life of the persons who went to their rescue, the officers and crew were safely landed. The vessel and cargo will prove a total loss.

A large unknown hermaphrodite brig, painted black, with a varnished waist, went ashore Wednesday night during the heavy fog on the west side of Gardner's Island, (east of Long Island,) near the Light, and was first seen in that position yesterday morning, lying broadside on. The crew was observed landing in a boat upon the beach, so that probably they are all safe. The spars and sails appeared to be all right. No communication, however, had been held from the main with the unfortunate vessel, and her name and destination were unknown.

In consequence of the very heavy northwest blow, which prevailed during Thursday night, the steamer Connecticut which left Allyn's Point about 10 o'clock, put back after proceeding as far as the Light, and remained in New-London harbor until the gale had abated. She arrived here about 7 o'clock last evening, having escaped a rough night on the Sound.

A new bark of 400 tons, named the Jane E. Bishop, has lately been launched from the shipyard of WELLS & CARPENTER, at Greenport, H. B. BISHOP, boss carpenter. She is owned by WELLS & CARPENTER, D. G. FLOYD, Capt. D. F. BISHOP, commander, and others; she is intended for the general freighting business, but for the present will run in EAGLE & HAZZARD'S Line of Mobile packets. She was taken in tow Wednesday to be brought to New-York; but owing to the westerly gale put in to New-London harbor.

LAUNCHED.—Thursday afternoon Mr. WATERBURY successfully launched from his ship-yard, foot of Houston-street, a propeller called the Huntsville. She is built of the best material, her outside planking and ceiling are edge-fastened with seven-eighths inch iron bolts, copper fastened, the whole trenailed with locust trenails; she is inclosed in an iron basket of outside diagonal strapping, iron straps

OPIATES.

BY AUG. BLAUVELT.

You write of days and nights in tears,
And ask me how to dull your pain;
I can n more than bid you test
The opiates I try—in vain.

Lift up the lesser loves that creep
Around thy feet, and let them twine,
And bear their blossoms to thy lips,
Like chalices of cheering wine.

Let sages share a seat with thee,'
Who teach that faith in man is wise;
That who could "break a trusting heart,"
Has turned his back upon the skies.

Whatever poets hold that Love
Survives, a God, whate'er befall:
Make thou their muses petted birds,
To sing in parlor, porch and hall.

Our angel Past doth stand and beck,
From Paradisal gates to thee:
Our angel Future hath her hand
Upon a Heaven's yielding key.

Go back from present gloom and meet
Our angel Past in Paradise;
Or pass beyond the dark, and let
Our angel Future bless thine eyes.

Retire within, and tend thy thoughts
As lady tends her garden flowers,
And pluck and send to me the sweets,
In letters thicker than the hours.

Go often up to God, and ask
For strength and patience not thine own;
And faith if we had parted not,
Some greatest bliss could not be known.

Test these by day; and give thy soul
To dreams at eve, and we shall meet:
Nor have the skies an opiate
Could make our joy a sweeter sweet.

The Crisis of 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The crisis and always the crisis. First we have had the crisis in its concentrated form of a panic in our midst, and now crisis and panic have seized upon the Old World, and with painful anxiety every mail from Europe is expected, especially by our large foreign houses, whose principal aid was drawn from the other side. If we are allowed a short respite and begin to breathe more freely, after a comparatively limited time of trial, and if we can now already take consolation in the conviction that the worst at least has passed over our heads, how vastly different is the development of the revulsion in Europe. How artificial is the framework of commerce, of industry, of finances, the entire fabric of society in Europe in comparison with this country, and how deeply must the disorganizing shock reverberate through every fibre of that intricate net-work of individual and international interests in the Old World! The bare contemplation of the mighty up-heaving of material interests now shaking Europe from Gibraltar to Moscow, and from Glasgow to Constantinople, amazes us, and how immeasurably ramified are the relations of Europe with the rest of the habitable globe, not to speak of our own country! Incalculable indeed are the effects which what has already taken place must infallibly produce on that colossal interchange of the productions of remote continents, across boundless seas, in their commerce with that great focus of trade and civilization, Europe. With London as its great centre, the world's trade spreads like the delicate threads of the spider-web from the tubular hiding-place of the miniature monster. The disorganization will become thorough, arrangements of drawing from distant shipping ports are suddenly disturbed and the produce cannot go forward, until hard cash intervenes and releases it; for credits on London, Paris and Hamburg will be unavailable, except on a few houses, or unless confirmed by the Government Banks. This will increase the drain of specie from England, especially eastward, to such enormous figures, that, even with its unlimited issue, the Bank of England may yet be compelled to suspend specie payment altogether.

In drawing this picture, I simply pass from cause to effect. It cannot well happen otherwise; the evil under which we are all suffering lies much deeper than is generally conceded in this country and by the European press. The European crisis was long expected by intelligent politico-economists and their fears were strengthened by the ominous cloud which, not greater than the size of a man's hand in the beginning, first gathered on the banks of the Ganges. The financial and commercial atmosphere of Europe was pregnant with overloaded electricity long before our own explosion, and it was mere accident that we took the lead in raising the cry of alarm. Although at bottom the secret causes which have brought about the crisis may be called analogous, our own case is widely different in its immediate bearings. The basis on which our prosperity rests, is more solid, more immediately national.

Our basis is eminently an agricultural one, and cannot be lastingly disturbed; our cotton, our provisions, and our grain, will, from the moment they find egress, command the means of alleviating our embarrassments. But Europe, in its more dangerous centres of population, is almost entirely bound up with manufactures, indispensable, it is true, in ordinary times, but easily dispensed with for six months, or a year, even, with such ample provision as must be within reach of the near and distant consumer at the present moment. For the prime necessaries of life money will be at hand in Europe, i. e., for grain, meat, sugar, coffee, and, though at very low prices, speculation, if not the spinner, will take off our hands the production of our cotton fields; but for what is in any way dispensable there will be comparatively little vent.

For Colonial Produce it is reasonable to assume prices will be higher in Europe than the present range, for the disorganization in banking facilities leads to curtailment in the exchange of the world's productions, particularly from distant portions of the globe, and the specie to take the place of bills of exchange, will be only procurable at a high premium, to which will have to be added freight, insurance and commission. The inflated paper values all over the world thus being reduced and ceasing to represent what they passed for, the precious metals by their scarcity naturally depress everything with the sole exception of the indispensable necessities of subsistence, which will be entirely governed by supply and demand, speculation having ceased to command the ascendancy which credit lent it.

When California and Australia suddenly electrified the value of everything by their golden shower; when the increased circulation of the precious metal created luxury, a zest for gambling in whatever way it may have been; when values rose through the fecundating power of the multiplied mediums of exchange: gold, and the paper values, which the former at once created and swelled, caused every article of daily use, and with it, real estate, to be borne along on the crest of the wave. The wave has surged too high, and we are now ebbing down again, in accordance with the immutable laws of nature, as laid down by our Supreme Creator.

In this country we have weathered the worst, and with our solid and vast resources, with our energy and excellent laws, and of a wise and intelligent Government firm in the confidence of a free and grateful people, the dawn of a better day already breaks upon us; with the advent of Spring our troubles will gradually disappear.

But Europe and the rest of the world we must not judge too lightly. To commercial and individual distress want associates itself; and want breeds discontent, discontent breeds revolt, and revolt raises the banner of revolution. While we are anchored on a rock of granite, our prosperity and our institutions, in Europe everything is artificial, unnatural and overstrained, and unfortunately so constituted that one nation cannot be a sufferer to any serious extent, either commercially or politically, without compromising the tranquillity of the rest.

Let us hope that these evil forebodings are overdrawn, but serious reflection on a subject so grave is demanded by our own interests as individuals and as citizens of a great commercial nation.

It is better that we should be on our guard, than that we abandon ourselves to the delusive supposition that European matters are so easily mended. With us rapid recuperation is a part of our nature; they are differently constituted. VERITAS.

The Hoboken Ferry.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The Hoboken Ferry has, on several occasions, been noticed in some of the City papers, with disparaging remarks, hardly just or liberal, considering how few accidents or disasters have fallen to its lot, during the long period of its ownership by the Messrs. STEVENS. This great exemption should certainly entitle the acts of its managers to a fair and considerate construction. In 1820 the Hoboken (now used solely as a cattle-boat) was built, and was, at that time, by far the swiftest and most commodious ferry-boat in the harbor. The boat has been several times lengthened and rebuilt, and new boilers and engine substituted for the old, and is well fitted and calculated for her present uses. The Fairy Queen, Pioneer, Newark, John Fitch, James Rumsey, James Watts, Chancellor Livingston, and Patterson have since been added, and are now, with the exception of the Pioneer and Rumsey, plying on the several ferries. The Fairy Queen, now the Phœnix, has been lengthened and rebuilt, and provided with new boilers and engine, and although in years an old boat, yet, in fact, by these renewals and repairs, has been kept in a safe and serviceable condition, and is a convenient boat for ferrying the long lumber teams and wagons, of which many cross at Christopher-street. The boats Fitch, Watts, Livingston, and Patterson ply on the lower ferries, and are first-class boats in all respects, and, from their peculiar shape, the swiftest and best adapted for forcing their way through the ice. The wedge-like form of the hull is almost a perfect protection while working their way through the ice—as in case of their being caught between conflicting fields, they would be lifted up if the pressure was great; or, if of a less degree, the ice would have a tendency to find its way under the bottom, instead of compressing the sides of the boat. In addition to all the other preventives to avoid accidents, a large provision of cork has been placed in each boat, so that in case of the boats being run into, the buoyancy of the cork would prevent the entire sinking of the boat; and in case of fire, the boat could be scuttled and saved from entire destruction. There is also a liberal supply of ladders, cork, life-preservers and boat-hooks on each bridge to save the lives of imprudent people who, in jumping after the boat, may chance to fall in the water. The John Potter, plying to South Amboy, is of precisely the same form and construction as the Hoboken Ferry-boats, and is confessedly one of the best ice-boats in the harbor. The particular forms of the above-named boats are the fruits of the thoughtful experience and genius of the late ROBERT L. STEVENS, to whom the public are indebted for pretty much all the advances made in the application of steam and the improved form of the steamboat in the present century. He it was who gave shape and form to the steamboat, bringing out his beautiful and fast developments in the place of the clumsy hulks then in use. He it was who taught the mechanic how to enable light-constructed boats to bear increased power of engine, by suspending the hull of the boats in the raised frames, held together by means of iron bolts and braces, and, instead of overloading the hulls with timber, taught the secret of the free use of fastenings. The Trenton, Burlington, New-Philadelphia and North America, triumphs in their day, were the first boats worthy of being called swift, and far beyond their rivals in every other essential quality. The introduction of the two latter as day boats to Albany, inaugurated a new era in steamboat progress, and are yet remembered with pride and pleasure, by thousands who traveled with them, as models of symmetry, speed, cleanliness and comfort. To him are we indebted for the T rail, by which the lives of thousands have been saved. This valuable improvement was wrought out by Mr. STEVENS while on a visit to England in the early period of our Railroad career.

The present form of ferry slips and improvements in bridges, are in a great measure his developments; and the slips, and bridges, and ferry-houses at Barclay-street and Hoboken are models of convenience. The Canal and Christopher-street houses are commodious, and all are kept in the most perfect condition of cleanliness and comfort. The bridges are suspended by extra chains; skillful pilots and engineers are employed, and a constant and watchful supervision is maintained over the details of the ferry, and it is no more than just to say, that the proprietor of the ferry is of all men the last to permit any neglect that might endanger the life of passengers or in any way compromise their comfort. The tasteful grounds at Hoboken are the results of the cultivated minds of R. L., J. C. and E. A. STEVENS. The rates of ferriage are at the lowest point, the first reduction having been voluntarily on the part of the Messrs. STEVENS, from one shilling to sixpence. The present fare, three cents, enables thousands to breathe the pure and fresh air at a trifling cost, in the beautiful walks and shady groves of the Elysian fields, grounds and water front, which, if offered for sale in the market, would realize to the proprietor dollars instead of the cents gained by the ferries. It would be a long recital of truths, of which the many are ignorant, to enumerate all the improvements introduced by the Messrs. STEVENS. By the father, Col. JOHN STEVENS and his sons, the public have been benefited by more than sixty years of faithful, skillful and persevering efforts to effectuate improvements in all matters pertaining to steam or railroads, as well as steamboats. There is a great debt due to the memory of ROBERT L. STEVENS, a history of his labors and inventions is yet to be given to the world, and when the true history of steam in connection with its application to vessels in this country, shall be given, it will rank Col. JOHN STEVENS and his son ROBERT at the head of the benefactors of mankind in that respect.

The memory of a mind so fertile and inventive should not be suffered to fall into oblivion, while pages upon pages have been filled with the obtrusive names of pretenders and charlatans. R. L. STEVENS was singularly shrinking and sensitive in the matter of pushing his name before the public, and so it has happened that the master-mind which gave impulse to his cotemporaries and to the brood of skillful and ingenious mechanics who have followed in his footsteps, has been suffered to be mainly appreciated by those who were immediately connected with his enterprises; by those employed by himself and brothers, and by the true friends and sympathizers of genius, of whom it cannot be said that too many exist.

Justice to the Sons of Revolutionary Soldiers.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Permit me to state the circumstances of a case, with which I am personally familiar, which seems to me to show the injustice sustained by very many of those whose fathers lost their lives in securing the independence of their country.

I know a woman in the State of New-Jersey whose husband enlisted in the 2d Regiment of Dragoons in 1777, to serve during the war. He was a sergeant in the company, his pay $15 a month. In an engagement with the British at Pound Ridge about the 1st of July, 1779, he lost his life.

In a year or two after this woman married again, and her second husband enlisted in a company of the New-Jersey militia for one year as a musician, and served out his time. In about two years after the war her second husband died, leaving his widow and three children entirely destitute of property. At the close of the war, having understood that Congress had made some provision for those widows who lost their husbands in the service, she applied to a member of Congress to attend to her claims, but what he did, or whether he ever did anything, she never could learn.

She was too poor, and had too few friends to assist her in following up her claims, and so she gave all up for lost, and died in 1825, without ever receiving a farthing from Government.

She struggled along with her children, having nothing to depend upon but the labor of her hands from day to day, until her two sons arrived at nine or ten years of age, and then was obliged to put them out as apprentices, until they should arrive at the age of 21 years. Thus they were deprived of an opportunity of obtaining even a decent education.

This woman, I think, was one of the excellent of the earth. Her lot through life was hard and sorrowful. Had she received a little aid from the Government,—that to which I believe she was entitled, it would have soothed many a sorrow and dried up many a tear. But this she never obtained.

The only remaining branch of her family is a son, now in his 74th year, who really needs assistance. And now I put it to you, to all your readers, to every Member of Congress, and to the whole nation, whether this son, and every son of a revolutionary soldier in similar circumstances, has not some claim upon the Government.

A SOLDIER'S SON.

Position and Character of the Italians.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As one of your constant readers, and an Italian by birth, permit me to present to you some observations regarding an article in the NEW-YORK TIMES of Dec. 5, entitled, "Life, Society, Manners, &c., in Modern Rome," by the author of many others upon Italy, already published in your Journal, I have only to say, that it is ungenerous for a republican of the United States to throw stones constantly at a country which deserves the sympathy of all generous hearts. And if your author is not capable of judging and appreciating matters in Italy by himself, it would be far better for his own instruction to read the cotemporary history of Italy, (instead of consulting his "old Parisian acquaintance, the Colonel of the 21st," upon the occupation of Rome by the French, and about Roman affairs, acquiring from the same source the knowledge that "one Frenchman is equal to four hundred and forty-four Romans!"

By the siege of Rome in 1848 he will learn that a handful of Roman volunteers, without military instruction, and with inadequate means, kept in check for more than a month, and were often victorious over the best French troops, 40,000 strong, backed by three other armies—Spaniards, Austrians and Neapolitans; and I must add, that the sympathy of the United States Legation was not in favor of the Republican Government then existing in Rome, but with its present tyrannical Ruler. He can learn what the Italians were at the same epoch during the siege of Venice. Everybody knows what has been their conduct in the Crimean War, and of the remonstrances of the Sardinian diplomat, in the late Congress of Paris, and I will further assert that there is more wisdom in the apparent apathy of the Roman people under existing circumstances than there will ever be in the light and undiscerning brains of half the scribblers upon Italy. Launching Large Ships.

YORKVILLE, Thursday, Dec. 13, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It has struck me forcibly, in view of the recent difficulties attending the launching of the mammoth steamship Great Eastern, that a much easier method of floating large ships, is both desirable and practicable.

It appears to me that there is nothing to prevent a large ship—no matter how large—from being built in an artificial basin or dock, located in close proximity to the river, into which the water might be permitted to enter and float her when completed.

Admitting that those whose professions have led them to study these matters exclusively, are the most competent to judge of the feasibility of the above plan, and to carry out its details, I merely throw out the suggestion; for as the purest pearl may be discovered in the foulest oyster, so may an original and practical idea be hit upon by a mean capacity. Respectfully yours, DIX.

Accidents from Explosive Fluids.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, Dec. 10, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

DEAR SIR: It appears to me that if the following fact were more generally known, the list of camphene accidents, now so fearful, would be materially diminished.

The fact is simply this: It is not necessary in order that an explosion should occur, when filling a lighted lamp, that the person should be so awkward as to bring the fluid in actual contact with the flame. If the lamp has been burning for some time, so as to have become heated, or if the can containing the fluid has been standing in a warm place, the whole atmosphere for some inches around becomes inflammable as soon as an attempt is made to fill the lamp. This is owing to the readiness with which the fluid vaporizes when the temperature is even slightly elevated.

In view of this fact, it is perfect folly to talk of "being careful" in this operation. The truth is, no camphene or fluid lamp should ever be filled except by daylight. I would that every man, woman and child in America might witness the appalling spectacles which I have seen, and such frequent warnings would be unnecessary. Respectfully,

A. H. SMITH.

FOREIGN MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

THEATRICAL MARRIAGES.—Some interesting marriages are talked of in European theatrical circles. Mlle. BORGHESE, the beautiful singer of the Theatre Lyrique, leaves to marry a trading captain of Bordeaux, who takes her out, as it were, as part of his venture. Wherever his vessel La Jolie Javotte touches, his wife will give a concert. The concert given, the merchandise disposed of, away sails the Jolie Javotte for other climes. There is something new under the sun at last. They say Mlle SOPHIE DULCKEN is about to marry Prince RADIZVIL, the richest landowner in Poland. This is good news to give courage to our girls, who continue their practice as well as to their mothers who hear it. They say likewise that GUEYMARD and LAUTERS have also determined on marriage, which decision gives cause of rejoicing to the public in general, as they will both remain in its service.

DEPARTURE OF DR. LIVINGSTONE.—Dr. LIVINGSTONE, the great African explorer, left London for Southampton on the 26th of November. On the 27th he embarked on board the Peninsular mail packet Tagus for Lisbon. The object of his visit to that city is understood to be for the purpose of consulting with the Portuguese Government, through whose territories on the eastern coast of Africa the great traveler purposes passing to reach the heart of the great African continent to pursue his magnificent discoveries there, and to open Central Africa to Europe through the great river Zambesi, which passes through the Portuguese possessions, and empties itself in the Mozambique Channel.

THE POPE AND THE INDIA MUTINIES.—The Dublin Freeman announces that the Most Rev. Dr. CULLEN has received 1,000 francs from his Holiness the Pope, and 600 from the Cardinal Prefect of Propaganda, to be applied to the relief of the sufferers in India from the Sepoy mutiny.

SIR JAMES BROOKE.—Letters received in England state that Sir JAMES BROOKE, of Sarawak, is about to visit that country. Borneo was tranquil.

A LITERARY CLERGYMAN.—The Dundee Courier says that a clergyman in a country parish not many miles from Dundee had occasion the other Sabbath to illustrate a point in his sermon by an allusion to the poet COWPER, which he did after this fashion: "In illustration of what I have been saying, my brethren, I may mention the amiable and Christian poet COWPER, with whose beautiful poems of 'Paradise Lost' and 'Paradise Regained' you must all be familiar."

THE ANTI-TOBACCO QUESTION.—An Anti-Tobacco Society has been for some time formed in England. A Mr. REYNOLDS recently delivered a lecture in Preston, and the audience became so impressed with his remarks that they advanced en masse and delivered up their pipes, snuff-boxes and tobacco, and solemnly declared that they would renounce for ever the seductive weed.

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

A Democratic Movement for an Enabling Act.

From the Leavenworth Journal.

DEMOCRATIC TERRITORIAL CONVENTION.—We invite the particular attention of the Democracy of the Territory to the call in another column, for a Convention to be held in Leavenworth on the 24th December. The object is to ask Congress to pass an enabling act, in our favor, under which the people of Kansas may meet, by representatives in Convention, frame a Constitution, and apply for admission into the Union under it as a State. This is the only way in which this troublesome question can be settled peaceably, and we have no doubt the Democracy of the country will sustain us in the application. Let every County act with vigor in the matter! Let the people meet in their primary meetings and conventions without delay, and send their good and true men along!

Democratic Opposition to the Lecompton Movement.

From the Leavenworth Journal, (Democratic.)

Now, if the sole object of the organic legislation of this Territory, is to do something either for or against Cuffee, then it is all well, if the interest of 40,000 or 50,000 white people had no claim to be protected, fostered and cherished, by a Constitutional Convention of such wiseacres as were assembled at Lecompton; but if they only met to make a fundamental law for the State of Kansas and two or three hundred negroes, and they will so avow, we have not a word to say, and we pledge ourselves in that event to go to the polls, abject, and servile as it would be, and cast our vote whichever way they tell us will help or hurt "poor darkee" most. But we think in sober, serious earnestness, that our own race, ourselves, our fathers, our mothers, our wives, and our children are deeply concerned in all the provisions of the organic law of the State of Kansas, we think the great principle of Democracy cries aloud for protection; we think the theory and practice of self-government involved in this question of submission. We think the Constitution of the Union contemplated that the people should govern themselves, and not an oligarchy of forty-two individuals. We think the Organic Act of this Territory, (which each man of them has sworn to support,) commanded them to let the people "form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way." And that whether it was about a "nigger" or a railroad, a Bank or a Governor, or any other given subject, we had the inherent right, and the Constitutional and legal right to determine for ourselves in a peaceful way at the ballot-box, our pro or con. We earnestly insist as Democrats, that we ought to enjoy the right to vote for or against the Constitution, and that if denied that right, we should not vote for it.

Pro-Slavery Opposition to the Lecompton Movement.

From the Kickapoo Pioneer, (Pro-Slavery.)

As far as we can judge, however, we think there are few or no objections to the Constitution itself, but we think, taking it merely as a matter of policy, that it would have been better, for the present as well as the future triumph of the party, had the Constitution been submitted to the people for their approval or non-approval, and certainly it would have been more just to have had it so submitted.

We are constrained to say that we believe that it is an infringement upon a people's rights, and contrary to the spirit and genius of a Republican form of Government, and in direct opposition to the intention of the Kansas and Nebraska Bill, to endeavor to force a Constitution (no matter how good that Constitution may be) upon a people against their will. We are satisfied that the attempt to force the one in question has not only injured the prospects of our Party for the present, but that the injury it has received is of a permanent nature, for we are convinced that many Democrats who would have supported the Constitution, had that whole document been submitted to the people, now feel themselves forced to oppose it as a matter of principle. Moreover, we do not believe that Congress will receive a Constitution in which the whole people have not had a voice.

Voice of the Kansas Press.

From the Leavenworth Journal.

If the Press of the Territory be an index of public opinion, then we are safe in saying the Lecompton Constitution will meet with but little favor at the hands of the people.

Out of about twenty papers published in the Territory but one favors the adoption of the Constitution, and out of four Democratic papers published in Leavenworth County, three, the Citizen, Pioneer and Journal oppose, while the Herald, edited by a member of the late Convention, supports the same.

The Oxford Vote.

From the National Democrat.

We were informed a few days since that the vote that would be polled at Oxford, on the Constitution, on the 21st of December, would be as large if not larger than the number polled at the last election. We understand also, that a couple of daily newspapers will be started there on the opening of navigation. From the notoriety Oxford has received, it would not surprise us if that remarkable place polled some 4,000 or 5,000 votes, next time, as before the inhabitants did not all vote.

The Action of the Lecompton Convention.

From the Lecompton National Democrat, Nov. 19.

We have already very fully expressed our opinion upon the character of the propositions submitted by the late Constitutional Convention to the people of this Territory. But the importance of the subject, and the urgency of the occasion, will justify us in entering somewhat more at large upon the investigation of the questions involved in the controversy, which is evidently about to disturb our repose, and to prolong the unhappy difficulties of our position.

The recent Convention represented a minority of the people. The members themselves could not possibly have overlooked this fact; and if they failed to take it into consideration, and to direct their proceedings in accordance with it, they have presented only one additional instance of that blindness which too often seizes upon public bodies, and contributes to the utter overthrow of their authority and the complete nullity of their acts.

It is not to be denied that the Free-State party were guilty of a great wrong, in obstructing the effort to take the census, and in refusing to go into the election of delegates to the Convention. By this omission, they suffered the political authority of the Territory, so far as the Convention was concerned, to pass into the hands of the minority; and they have no right to complain, if that minority should make use of their legitimate power, in a legitimate way, to secure the ascendancy of their own political views. It was to be expected that the successful party would make the most of the advantage which success placed in its power. But there was a limit to this advantage, beyond which it was not only impolitic, but even impossible, for the dominant party in the Convention to carry its proceedings with success. So soon as it attempted to exceed this limit it surrendered the advantage it had already acquired, placed itself in the wrong, and restored to the majority all the legal and moral power of its superior numbers—a power which the latter had previously lost, only through its own original error. It is ever to be lamented that the Convention, for want of moderation and wisdom in the use of its legitimate power, and from an utter failure to perceive the true capabilities of its position, and the exigencies of its very existence, has utterly thrown away its golden opportunity for usefulness, and sacrificed the high and sacred interests which it had in its keeping. How great and beneficent would have been the influence of just and conciliatory counsels! How completely disarmed would have been the opposition, with all their malevolent predictions falsified, and all their excited apprehensions allayed, if the question had been met in a manly spirit, and a decisive and satisfactory proposition had been fairly submitted to the votes of the people! Now, on the contrary, their worst fears are realized, and their predictions of evil are more than verified, because a trick has been resorted to for the purpose of mocking and deceiving them with the appearance of a choice, when in reality they have no substantial question to decide.

The body of gentlemen composing the Convention, seems to have been impressed with the idea that its sole duty was to sustain the cause of Slavery as a desirable institution for the new State. But the thought never seems to have occurred, in all their deliberations, that they were doing this for a people, of whom the majority are decidedly opposed to that institution. If they claimed to represent the whole people, because the great body of them failed to go into the election and thereby were presumed to acquiesce in their appointment, they certainly were bound to respect the opinions of their constituents, so far as these were known. And if they really desired to subserve the true interests of slaveholders, in or out of the Territory, the most moderate exercise of judgment would have dictated the policy of submitting a proposition which might have had some chance of being accepted. No well-informed man can believe that the Constitution, in either of the alternative forms adopted by the Convention, will ever receive the sanction of the people of Kansas. It is plain, therefore, that the inevitable result must be a serious injury to the just rights of slaveholders, and an obstacle to the future acknowledgment of those rights by the people of the Territory.

In making these remarks, we must be understood as excepting from the scope of them, certain gentlemen in the Convention who were well known to entertain proper views as to the rights of the people, in the matter of adopting their own Constitution. That they were induced to acquiesce eventually in the result as it was finally shaped, is to be attributed to the influence of circumstances well calculated to excuse the error, if it was an error. They were bound to take this course, as we understand the case, in order to defeat the policy of those who were opposed to all submission whatever.

The Lecompton Minority.

From the Leavenworth Journal.

We are informed that there were twenty-four members of the Convention at Lecompton who earnestly advocated the full submission of the Constitution to the people. Who they were we do not know, or we would give their names that the people might honor such men as they merit. For they would indeed deserve all commendation, and the more so as they were all Southern born and Southern reared, and are presumed to have a little more sympathy with and to understand the true interests and wishes of the South a little better than those who have seldom or never breathed Southern air.

Kansas Affairs.

To the Democratic Party of Kansas Territory:

Kansas determines for herself, on the 21st day of December next, whether she will be a Free State or a Slave State. On the 1st Monday in January following, the people are called upon to hold their first election under the State Constitution, for Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of State, Auditor of State, Treasurer of State, and for Representative in Congress.

The several counties are requested to nominate candidates for each branch of the Legislature.

The Democratic Party of Kansas, without regard to Free State or Slave State, are requested to send delegates from the several counties of Kansas to a State Convention, to be holden in Lecompton on the first Monday, the 7th day of December next, for the purpose of nominating Democratic candidates for all of the above-named offices, to be supported by the Democratic Party at the election to be holden on the first Monday in January, 1858, for State officers, under the Constitution for the State of Kaneas.

How Gov. Reeder Escaped from Kansas.

GEO. W. BROWN, editor of the Herald of Freedom, in Kansas, is publishing some remarkable incidents in the history of the Territory. Here is an account of Gov. REEDER'S flight during the excitement between the two hostile parties:

Gov. REEDER being unprotected, and the United States Government, in its Executive and Judiciary Departments arrayed against him, determined to leave the Territory. Finding it unsafe to remain longer with the Investigating Committee, he retired to a friend's house near Lawrence, where he remained but a short time. His enemies not finding him as they expected, with the Committee, immediately sent to Leavenworth and Kansas City, to watch the steamboats. Guards were stationed on the roads and also at the steamboat landings, as far down as Lexington, to search the boats and prevent his escape. He, however, succeeded in eluding his pursuers, and with the friendly assistance of Mr. JENKINS, succeeded in arriving safely at Kansas City. Here he was taken charge of by Col. ELDRIDGE, and secreted in the American Hotel. On the arrival of G. W. BROWN, from Alton, the hotel was surrounded by an infuriated mob, as related in the preceding chapter, threatening forcible search and seizure. This greatly added to the danger of Gov. REEDER. But the courage and address of Col. ELDRIDGE, saved his hotel from search, and the Governor from seizure and probable death.

Steamboats were so vigorously guarded and the search so strictly made that it was considered unsafe to attempt to get on one at Kansas City; and as it was almost equally unsafe to longer remain in his present concealment, a new expedient was resorted to. The Governor shaved off his fine whiskers and moustache, frowsed his hair, dressed himself up in the clothes of an Irish laborer, and with his coarse shoes and stockings, his pantaloons too short at top and bottom, his coarse shirt and jacket, a pipe in his mouth, and an axe on his shoulder, and bundle in his hand, he was seen sauntering around during the evening apparently unobserved and unobserving. As soon as it had become sufficiently dark, and the crowd had retired from the landing, Mr. EDWARD ELDRIDGE, brother of the Colonel, and his wife, came in a skiff to the landing, and Gov. REEDER stepped in. They rowed during the night twenty-eight miles to Liberty, when they landed. Here they remained till a steamboat came along bound down the river, when the Governor went on board, took a deck passage with the laborers and boat hands, and in due time landed safely at St. Charles, from which he made his passage across the country to Illinois.

An Abolition and Disunion View of Mr. Douglas' Position.

From the Anti-Slavery Standard.

THE VARIANCE OF PILATE AND HEROD.—Of all the comical concatenations of late times, perhaps the oddest is that combination of circumstances which has elevated STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS to the rank of the Defender of Free Kansas. The Republican newspapers, in their extremity, may well catch at anything that has the look of a life-preserver; but we never had expected to see them laying hold of such a straw as honest Mr. DOUGLAS. It shows indeed the desperation of the case, when such a loop is seized with eagerness to hang a hope upon. And yet this seems to be all that there is to look to. The Free-State men, by going into the election under the Border Ruffian auspices, have blocked the way to a forcible resistance of the Lecompton Constitution—even if there were ever any real desire or purpose to offer such—and nothing short of a dangerous insurrection would suffice to stay the triumphant possession of their Territory by Slavery. And the itch of the Yankee nation for voting will unquestionably, we think, impel them to the further absurdity of voting on the delusive question submitted to them by their conquerors, for the purpose of making them rivet the chain which is to bind them to the slaves with their own hands, whether they vote for it or against it. So that there is no chance for Kansas being permitted to decide for herself whether she will hold slaves or not, except in the quarrelling of the chiefs of the banditti that have brought her to her present distress by their agreement. It is said that when rogues differ, honest men come by their own again. But it is not often the case, and we fear that it will not be so this time. * * *

We now hear by every telegraphic dispatch from Washington that Mr. DOUGLAS intends to stand by Gov. WALKER and to resist the imposition of the Slave Constitution upon Kansas unless she has a fair vote upon it. Mr. BUCHANAN, on the other hand, intends to maintain the supremacy of the Lecompton Constitution, as fully expressing the sovereign pleasure of the Power whose creature he is. It hardly seems as if it were possible that the battle between these two belligerents could ever be actually fought out. But there is a reasonable possibility of it. The natural enmity between the ins and the outs must break out in some shape or other. It is high time for the campaign for the next Presidency to begin, and both Mr. DOUGLAS and Gov. WALKER mean to lose no time in putting themselves into the best position for bringing it to a prosperous conclusion, each for himself. As a basis of his operations Mr. Douglas must have Illinois. And the perils of the last stricken field may well warn him that he must have at least the show of a Northern virtue, whether he have it or not. The Kansas dispute, end as it may, is pretty sure to break the Democratic Party in pieces, like a potter's vessel, and then the new combinations which must follow will afford a chance to the man who has the eye to discern and the skill to control them—to arrange them to his own purposes. So there may be more sincerity in the protestations of Mr. DOUGLAS than we might be inclined to attribute to them if uttered under any other circumstances.

Governor WALKER, undoubtedly, went to Kansas with the fixed purpose of making it a Slave State if it could be done without the destruction of the Democratic Party. This he found, by hard experience, to be impossible, and he fell back on the preservation of the integrity of the party. The slaveholders, who know no party, by whatever name they may choose to call themselves, but their own, cared nothing for the salvation of the Democracy, so they could secure the supremacy of the Slaveocracy. Mr. Buchanan stands by the Slaveholders, Mr. Douglas and Governor Walker by the Democratic Party, and the question is which will be able to outwit or outgeneral the other. According to all precedents, Slavery ought to coax or bully all opposition out of the field, and the chances are that they will do so now. We think that the hopes of Kansas which are built upon the prospect of this quarrel have rather a sandy foundation. But still, something may grow out of it. The great number of voters obtained for Colonel FREMONT, though it was at the cost of eliminating from their creed all but the most infinitesimal shadow of Anti-Slavery, was enough to show that there is a strength at the North which Northern aspirants must seek to conciliate. The cheapest form of conciliation is that of a zeal to permit Kansas to have slaves if she wants them, but to be rid of them, as she has rid herself of the free blacks, if she do not. If Mr. DOUGLAS will take our advice (and there are few persons whose advice is of more value than ours on such a matter) he will stand his hand and insist on the game being played out according to the rules he imposed when he invented it—little as he meant they should ever have such an application. Would it not be an edifying sight to be hold the Fremont men of '56 converted into rampant Douglas men in '60? And yet it is by no means impossible that he may be at the head of the next Northern party—which will be constructed out of the wreck of the present Democratic Party. If Mr. DOUGLAS had only sense enough to be honest, we are confident of his making a good run.

Anti-Slavery View of Mr. Douglas' Position.

From the National Era.

The position of Mr. DOUGLAS is a subject of various speculation. The Republicans may be assured of one fact—he will not act with them, or separate himself from his party; but in his party, his ambition is always to be a leader. If he do not sustain the course of Mr. BUCHANAN in relation to the Lecompton Constitution, he will endeavor to manage his opposition as, while saving his interests with the Northern Democracy, he shall lose nothing with the Southern. His relations to the former constrain him to oppose the action of the Calhoun Convention, but there are many questions of equal, if not greater interest to the Southern men, on which his cooperation with them may be all-important.

It may be desirable to organize as a State New-Mexico, which has elected a delegate on the Slavery issue, and which is believed by the Slave Power to be controlled by its supporters. It is desirable to organize two or three more territories in the slaveholding section, as the germ of future States, Arizona and the Indian Territory among them. Now, suppose Mr. DOUGLAS should embrace all these subjects in his programme, would the South take deadly offence at an act enabling the people of Kansas to form a State Constitution?

Power of the People of a State over their Constitution.

From the New-Orleans Bulletin.

The "freedom-shriekers" are again trying to create a breeze about Kansas. They evidently don't want the question settled, as it is now their principal stock in trade. The demagogues in Kansas who pretend so much love for a free Constitution, threaten to not vote upon the Constitution which is to be submitted to them. Could anything show in a more forcible light their transparent and shameless hypocrisy? If they don't like the Constitution, why, in the name of Africa and lemons, don't they vote it down? A paper before us works itself up to a great pitch of excitement because a section of the proposed instrument says that no alteration shall take place in it until 1864. This is the veriest moonshine. There is no power in Venice or the United States to prevent the people of a State from altering their Constitution as they shall see proper, either in the mode pointed out by the existing organic law, or in opposition to that mode. Admit, if the reader pleases, that the latter course is revolutionary. There is no power in this country that can call a State to account for such conduct. The people of Louisiana are to-day living under a Constitution formed in a manner directly contrary to the mandatory language of the former Constitution. That instrument declared that amendments should be proposed by the Legislature, and submitted to the people at the next regular election; and, if then duly ratified, they should be declared parts of the fundamental law of the State. The people, however, were dissatisfied with this in consequence of the length of time which would necessarily elapse before the Constitution could be altered according to the prescribed mode. They therefore chose delegates to a Constitutional Convention which met in this city; and, in total disregard of the then existing organic law, framed a new one, which was unanimously ratified by an overwhelming majority, and is now the Constitution of the State.

The Public Printing—The Charge of Corruption.

From the Richmond South.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, Dec 8.

I sent you a special dispatch to-day communicating the fact of the happy solution of the Printing imbroglio, by an arrangement between BANKS and STEADMAN as equal copartners in the interest of the business, which will be conducted under the firm name of the copartnership. The arrangement had been submitted in the most frank and honorable manner to mutual friends of the two candidates, and has been consummated to the great satisfaction of the friends of each in the Democratic Party. A very creditable feature in the arrangement is the prospective establishment by the copartners of a newspaper, of an improved standard, at the Capital, that will reflect the Democratic sentiment of the country. This is an evident improvement on the old beneficiary system, in which the public printing seems to have been regarded as a mere private emolument, without any attendant obligations to the party at large. The establishment of a press of a high Democratic standard, as Messrs. BANKS and STEADMAN propose, that will not be a mere Executive organ, but that will reflect the sentiment of the party at large, the printing patronage, in fact, being theirs, and not of the Executive branch of the Government, denotes decidedly a change for the better, implying as it does a due acknowledgment to the party, and conveying a public benefit not lightly to be estimated, in furnishing to the country a readable Washington paper. It is understood that the paper will be established some time between this and the

The Post-Office Department—Extracts from the Annual Report of the Postmaster-General.

REVENUE AND EXPENDITURES.

The expenditures of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1857, including payments to letter carriers and for foreign postages, amounted to $11,508,057 93, viz.:

Compensation to postmasters	$2,285,609 86
Ship, steamboat and way-letters	17,994 76
Transportation, including foreign mails	7,239,333 27
Wrapping paper	32,120 78
Office furniture, for post-offices	3,078 25
Advertising	75,199 37
Mail bags	65,219 21
Blanks	117,179 67
Mail locks, keys and stamps	12,287 50
Mail depredations and special agents	65,228 25
Clerks for offices—post-offices	834,025 60
Postage stamps	30,686 80
Stamped envelopes	63,507 74
Payments to letter carriers	154,710 51
Repayments for "dead letters"	41 84
Miscellaneous payments	189,107 99
Payments for balances on British mails	297,098 88
Payments for balances on Bremen mails	5,187 44
Total	$11,508,057 93

If to the expenditures of the year, as stated, there be added the sum of $734 16 lost by compromising debts under the 3d section of the act of March 3, 1851, and if the sum of $1,121 93 gained by small balances carried to "Suspense account" be deducted, the net expenditure for the year will be $11,507,670 16.

The gross revenue for the year 1857, including receipts from letter carriers and from foreign postages, amounted to $7,353,951 76, viz.:

Letter postage	$983,207 24
Stamps sold	5,447,764 51
Newspapers and pamphlets	634,863 51
Registered letters	35,876 87
Fines	15 00
Receipts on account of emoluments	79,351 00
Receipts on account of letter carriers	154,710 51
Receipts on account of dead letters	6,756 57
Extra compensation overcharged	1,667 30
Miscellaneous receipts	9,739 25
Total	$7,353,951 76

But if to the gross sum above stated be added the permanent annual appropriations made by he acts of March 3 1847, and March 3, 1851, in compensation for services rendered to the Government in the transportation and delivery of franked matter, the whole revenue of the year will be $8,053,-951 76, being $3,453,718 40 less than the expenditures.

ESTIMATES OF RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES IN 1858.

The aggregate sum appropriated by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1857, for the regular expenditures of the year ending June 30, 1858, exclusive of the transportation of foreign mails, of payments for foreign postages and to letter carriers, was	$11,173,247
For Panama mails, act of March 3, 1857	135,000
For Charleston and Havana mail, act of March 3, 1857	50,000
For the transportation of the mails between New-York and Havre, and New-York and Bremen, under the new contracts authorized by the acts of March 3, 1845, and July 2, 1836, there will be required the sum of	230,000
For payments to letter carriers, act of March 3, 1851, estimated	165,000
Payments for foreign postages, estimated	380,000	$12,053,247
The means applicable to defray the foregoing expenditures consist of:
1. The balance standing to the credit of the department on the Auditor's books on the 1st July, 1857	1,163,886
2. The estimated gross revenue of 1858, including foreign postages and receipts from letter carriers	7,795,188
3. Balances of appropriations made by Congress remaining in the Treasury subject to requisition	$1,625,000	$10,584,074
Leaving the sum of		$1,469,173

to be appropriated from the Treasury to defray the expenditures of the year 1858, as they have been authorized by law.

In the forgoing statement I have not embraced the cases in which Congress has by law directed particular services and made special appropriations for them out of the Treasury, such as the transportation of the mail by sea between San Francisco, Cal., and Olympia, W. T., between New-Orleans and Vera Cruz, Mexico, and for the mail on Puget's Sound W. T., because the means are supplied by the Treasury upon the Postmaster-General's requisitions; and if they were embraced as matters of receipt and expenditure, the resulting balance to be provided for would still be the same.

MONEY ORDERS.

The adoption of some plan for the more convenient and safe remittance of small sums of money through the mails, by means of orders drawn upon one postmaster by another, having been frequently urged upon this Department as a matter worthy of its attention, it is deemed proper here to state that, on the 31st January last, my predecessor transmitted to the Chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads in the House of Representatives, in compliance with his request, the outline of such a plan as might be put in operation in this country. The submission of it does not appear to have been accompanied by any recommendation of the Department, nor does it appear that the honorable Committee acted upon the subject. A system of remitting sums of money not exceeding £5 sterling ($25) in amount was adopted by the British Post-Office Department in 1839, and some idea may be formed of the growth and extent of its operations from the following brief statement derived from the Annual Report of Her Majesty's Postmaster-General, dated March 17, 1857:

Number and Amount of Money Orders issued in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland every fifth year, commencing with 1840:

Year ending.	No. of orders issued in sums not exceeding £5 sterl'g.	Aggregate amount in pounds sterling.
Jan. 5, 1840	188,921	£313,124
Jan. 5, 1845	2,806,803	5,636,395
Dec. 31, 1850	4,420,713	8,494,496
Dec. 31, 1855	5,807,412	11,009,279
Dec. 31, 1856	6,178,982	11,805,562

CITY POSTS.

With the view to facilitate the receipt and delivery of letters in New-York, Boston and Philadelphia, the Postmasters in those cities have been instructed to make improvements in their letter-carrier system to the full extent authorized by law. In New-York I found that nearly everything had been done that could be accomplished under existing laws, except the transmission of drop letters direct to their address without going into the main office, which is now done. Six stations, or sub-offices, had been established, at which, as well as at the principal office, the letters were sorted and passed into the hands of the carriers; and a large number of boxes for the collection of letters had been placed at convenient distances throughout the City. On all letters through the mail the carriers receive two cents each for delivery, and on drop letters one cent. I had hoped to be able to reduce the delivery fee to the uniform price of one cent; but this was found impracticable in New-York and Philadelphia, inasmuch as the law requires that the entire cost of delivery shall be defrayed out of the carriers' receipts. In Boston, where the districts are all comparatively densely populated, one cent a letter is made to pay. The postage on drop letters, including the carrier's fee, is now two cents; and upon the improved plan now adopted for their delivery direct from the main office, or the nearest station, as the case may be, it is believed that the public convenience will be fully subserved. In each of these cities there are to be from four to six deliveries a day, and the letters for mailing, &c., are to be collected and disposed of as frequently as occasion may require. I do not feel at liberty to advise the free delivery of letters by carriers; but I would recommend a modification of the present law, so as to give the Postmaster-General authority to have the delivery made at one cent a letter, whether the carriers' receipts are sufficient to meet expenses or not. If the improved system is found to work satisfactorily in three cities above mentioned, it is my purpose to extend it to all the other principal cities in the United States.

THE PLUNDER OF DELHI.—A private letter from Delhi, dated Sept. 27, says: "For a description Cashmere shawls, inlaid with gold, bodies covered with gold lace, skirts of dresses, watches, bars of gold, beds of silk and down, such as no nobleman's house in England could produce, you would see Sikhs carrying out of Delhi the first day, as if they were almost nothing. A shawl which, in England, would fetch £100, they were selling for four rupees, and, you may depend, our fellows were not behind them * * * It is supposed the Rifles will go to England with upwards of £1,000 each, though General WILSON has issued an order that the prizes shall be all put together and divided. Most of our men are worth upwards of 100 rupees."

The Chinese War—Movements of Other Nations.

From the London Times.

The state of affairs in China at present is singular enough. We have invited half the civilized world to a great military and diplomatic spectacle, and then failed to make our appearance. French, Americans, Russians, Portuguese are waiting for the curtain to rise and the entertainment to begin. For some twelve months we have been on the point of commencing operations at Canton and negotiations further north, but as yet the frigates and steamers are lying idly at their moorings, and the highest excitement of the blue-jackets is to stop some junk which looks like a pirate, or some paltry lorcha which tries to break the blockade. Lord ELGIN is a Commissioner without a commission; General ASHBURNHAM is a commander without an army. It cannot be wondered that the representatives of the other Powers should be getting impatient and independent. Indeed, there is plenty of food for sarcasm in the position of our affairs—a large field for the ambition of any foreign State which may aspire to take the lead, which we seem incapable of keeping. This condition of things is the not unnatural result of such an expedition of all nations as the Chinese affair was made, and shows how much the interests of the country may suffer from the unscrupulous efforts of faction, which force the Government to take a lower tone with foreign Powers, and admit them to cooperation in what should be purely national enterprise. If England should not wage a little war she should as certainly not wage a joint-stock war. When this country hampered itself by soliciting the countenance of other States in a contest with a Chinese Governor it committed an act which we sincerely trust will never be repeated.

The Russians, who contemplate a great extension of their empire at the expense of China, and are laboring at the establishment of a naval and commercial power on the Pacific, have not been idle. We certainly do not see with much alarm these efforts of a State which has lately failed so signally in Europe. The Amoor is divided from the real seat of Russian power by thousands of miles of wilderness, and the settlements on the Pacific must, in case of a war, easily fall into the hands of an enemy. In fact, they were only saved to the Czar by the premature peace of 1856. Nor are they likely to have any immediate effect on China. The real, populous, rich, and busy China is to the south, accessible to our transport ships and gunboats, and must inevitably be brought into closer relation with the power which governs India than with the possessors of the Siberian wilds. But still the spirit which animates the Russians is worthy of notice. Both Muscovite and Briton may well have the feeling that their respective empires are inevitable and eternal rivals. England and Russia are the two nations of the Old World which have the strongest vitality, and they represent principles which can never be reconciled. Our enmities or friendships with other nations may be merely transitory, dependent on some local question, some interest of the hour. But as long as the Russians form an aggressive Asiatic Power we and they must always be antagonistic. Other nations we care little about; they ease their minds by abusing us in journals, and are satisfied. But Russia is quite another kind of opponent, and, though we have had the better of her of late years both in Europe and Asia, no one who watches her will believe that her resources are exhausted or her spirit tamed.

Count PUTIATIN left St. Petersburg about the time that the British electors made their demonstration for Lord PALMERSTON, and arrived at the Amoor overland in 70 days. He steamed down to the mouth of the Pei ho and sent a messenger to the Court of Pekin. The Russian Admiral has no force, and the embassy is of an ostentatiously pacific character. However, we do not know what influences may be brought to bear inland, nor how far the presence of a Russian emissary in the Pacific may not be a blind to other negotiations. The evident object of the Russians is to place an Embassy at Pekin, which may give them a power not obtainable by other nations. It is probable, however that they will be foiled by the obstinacy of the Imperial Court. In fact, China knows and dreads the Czar much less than the English Government, since the latter threatens the large towns, the coast, and the mouths of the great rivers, while the Russians are divided from the seats of wealth and power by the whole breadth of Tartary. But it is not only the Russians who have endeavored to forestall us. The Americans are said to have endeavored to commence negotiations with YEH. This scheme was, however, put an end to by the blockade instituted by Sir MICHAEL SEYMOUR. Our American friends must therefore proceed regularly by means of Mr. REED and the constituted authorities of the Celestial Empire. YEH and his yamun are for the present debarred from communication with the outside world.

Yet we cannot expect this state of things to continue. Not only the Russians, but the Americans, the French, and the whole race of small European Powers will have a right to ask us what we intend to do. Is the blockade of Canton to last forever? Does Lord ELGIN intend to proceed by war or negotiation? It is pretty evident that an appeal to the Emperor will effect nothing. At all the northern ports the Chinese are very glad to see Englishmen, will sell us all the tea and silk we want, allow travelers to go as far as they like into the interior, and will ship themselves in thousands to the Australian colonies. But they will not fight or negotiate. What, then, are we to do with there stolid Orientals? It would be an absurdity and a cruelty to injure them for the excesses of the Canton mob; while a demand for an Embassy at Pekin would probably be answered after the lapse of a year by a provokingly well-written refusal. The conclusion to which every one must come is that this Canton affair should be settled by itself. Why should we not take Canton, reoccupy Chusan, and then commence negotiation? Of course, the answer is that there are no men, and it is a valid one for the moment. But we must certainly call attention to the fact that the Chinese question requires a speedy settlement. If by any means troops can be spared they will be well employed in bringing matters to an issue. A very few would probably be sufficient for the first operations, and when India is fairly settled more might follow. Anything is better than the inactivity which now seems to prevail.

The English Heroes in India—Who are the Governing Classes in England.

From the London Times.

The honors of our Indian heroes are before us—a G. C. B. to Sir JOHN LAWRENCE, K. C. B.'s to HAVELOCK and WILSON. If these are installments we have nothing more to say. We are neither fidgety nor impatient, we can wait for justice. We can wait a proper, a reasonable time. The Indian affair is not yet over. But it should be understood that we are waiting, that the British public watches with a generous and keen jealousy the rewards of its faithful Indian servants, that it claims justice for them, and will be content with nothing less. Meantime we can only remark that the man who has—so far as one man can be singled out for such praise—saved India, has got just the reward of the General who did not take the Redan; that HAVELOCK and WILSON have got for the relief of Lucknow, and the capture of Delhi, just what Lord LUCAN and Lord CARDIGAN and Sir RICHARD AIREY got for doing—we all know what—in the Crimea; and that VAN CORTLANDT and CHAMBERLAIN are C. B's—an honor distributed in the late war by the dozen.

The country has formed its estimate of the services of these men, and is not likely to recede from it. The country is proud of these men. Those especially who constitute the basis and source of political power, who dictate the policy and govern the Government of England—the middle classes—are proud of these men. They see in these men not only useful instruments, convenient tools, agents for particular services which are wanted, laborers who must be paid their wages, but men who are an honor, a boast, and a pride to the nation. They see a character in them which demands honor as its natural reward, and which can bear the weight of honor, carry off any quantity of it, and wear the crown nobly. It may suit poets and romancers to represent the aristocracy of a country as the natural privileged recipient of honor, to describe a nation as wholly depending upon its aristocracy for all the great and brilliant feats which are required for maintaining its supremacy or rank in the family of nations. This is the language of old romance. The "nobles" do everything there; they are the only true warriors and statesmen—they are the only men who take castles and cities, and storm forts and win battles; they are the only men who have heads, or wills, or aspirations, or energies, or anything of which the human race is proud: they are the patterns of the genus man, the show specimens of the race, the samples of what our nature was designed to reach; they fulfill the ordained type of humanity, exhibit all its great traits, and do all the great acts—everything that is difficult, grand and lofty. No presumptuous plebeian is allowed this privilege—high action is not meant for such as he; he must stand by as spectator, and see the "nobles" act, and execute everywhere the task of the champion or the savior of the State. They alone even are allowed to sacrifice themselves, and are endowed with the spirit of martyrs. Such were the HORATII and CURIATII, and such was CURTIUS of the Old World—we may almost say of the modern world before the present age in which we live.

This is ancient thought, but we may say with perfect certainty now that this is obsolete thought. It was very natural for poets to talk thus,—it was convenient; perhaps it was once true: perhaps noble blood did once fulfill this work. At any rate, we do not grudge romance its machinery for creating interest, and its dramatis personæ of knights, princes, and barons. We are amused with it all, and take it to express the sentiment of the day; and still less would we cancel one page of the world's past history. But, whether or not this may have been true once, it is certain that it is not true now. If this was ever history, it is now fiction. As a matter of fact the middle classes now produce that type of mind which may be called the governing one—that character which rules mankind, which accomplishes great objects, which marshals means to ends, gives life to a nation, and produces the great events and the noble achievements of the day. There is not one single feature, intellectual or moral, which was once thought to attach to the operations of the nobility alone, which does not every whit as fully and truly attach to the careers of our Indian Generals, born and bred in the middle ranks, and imbued with the whole tone, temper, and ethics of middle life. There is not one single feature of energy, or self-sacrifice, or daring—not one single solid, not one single brilliant trait, which belongs in history or romance to the deeds and careers of aristocracies in public, civil, or military life, at home or abroad, in the Senate or in the field, which does not belong to the careers of NEILL, NICHOLSON, and HAVELOCK. These middle class men do exactly now, step for step, what the representatives of aristocracy were once alone thought capable of doing. There is no duty and no service, no force of brain or of will, no mettle, no fire, no flight, which was once attributed to nobility alone which these men do not display. These men do all that any nobles in the world ever did. Open any history and see if any privileged order has done more for a country than they.

Here, then, we say, is the true aristocracy of England; so far as our noble families come up to this type they belong to this aristocracy; the path is open to them; but to speak of them at this time of day as in exclusive possession of this type is the mere froth of romance. Third-rate novelists, who succeed to the obsolete theories as footmen do to the antiquated dress—the powder, wigs, velvet breeches, and silk stockings of former days, or who wish to insinuate themselves into the circles of fashion by flattery, may snarl at the middle classes of England, may depreciate middle life to exalt upper, may lodge all the magnanimity of the nation in the one, and all its emptiness, feebleness and vulgarity in the other; but this is the mere dream and bubble of a selfish brain in the face of facts. No theory of the exclusive greatness of NEVILLES and GRANVILLES and DE VERES and DE BURGHS can stand against facts. It must vanish like any other obsolete dream of astrology and alchymy, like old geography, or old mechanics, or old astronomy, or old medicine. The repository of the governing type of character is the British nation, and no one class singly in it.

Our Indian Generals, then, we say, are the proper objects of the highest honors. High honors do not suit our aristocracy alone, though some may think so; they suit these men of the middle classes also; they suit them admirably, suit them perfectly. There is no disproportion, and there will be no incongruity; these men have earned honors well, and they can wear it well. Nor let us forget one particular honor appropriate to the dead. General NEILL has left a family behind him. A national provision for them, and that a generous one, is an honor which such a General can justly claim from the tomb. Such a provision will be an honor to the dead and to the living,—to him who earned it and to those who receive it. The orphans of our soldiers are the children of the nation, and their national adoption, while it is their necessary support, is also by its associations their pride and glory—the noblest of all family escocheons and insignia.

Anecdotes of General Warren.

At a recent meeting of the Historical Society in Boston, a communication from General WILLIAM H. SUMNER, relative to WARREN, during the campaign which ended in WARREN'S death on Bunker Hill, was read by Mr SAMUEL BURNHAM. The following letter occurs in the course of the paper, written to General SUMNER with a view to corroborate a statement made July 4, 1825, at a festival meeting of the veterans who had taken part in the Bunker Hill celebration of that year, to the effect that WARREN'S last words were: "I am a dead man; fight on, my brave fellows, for the salvation of your country," and which was doubted by Professor WATERHOUSE, of Harvard:

TEWKESBURY, Aug 3, 1828.

SIR: I have read the piece in the Patriot in which it is doubted whether the toast you gave on the 4th of July, as the words of WARREN, are correct. They are strictly true, and stated exactly as I told you on the morning of the Anniversary. I knew Dr. WARREN before that day, had seen him among the troops at Cambridge, and am certain of the fact. His words made a lasting impression on my mind, and I have repeated them a thousand times. I was a private in Captain WALKER'S company, in BRIDGE'S regiment, and was on the ground all the night before building up the works. After the old engineer had fixed his stake, ELLAKIN WALKER, JONATHAN BEARD, and myself, (who are now both living, I believe—Mr. BEARD was at the celebration with me) thought he had not got them quite straight, and we moved one of them to square it up.

The day of the battle I was near the redoubt. We did all we could, but were obliged to give up at last. The last time the British came up we were moving off all in a hurry into the rear of the redoubt, to stop them as they came up, and there it was I saw General WARREN. His clothing was bloody when he cried out to us, "I am a dead man; fight on, my brave fellows, for the salvation of your country." We had not time to do much, but got off as soon as we could. I never saw WARREN after that. The British fired upon us both small and large guns on the retreat, and more of us got off than could reasonably have been expected.

I knew Gen. PUTNAM and Col. PRESCOTT well. I saw PUTNAM riding around very active; I saw him ten times at least, I should think. PUTNAM went off with DAVID BAILEY and a number of others, and they took tools with them, to entrench on Bunker Hill; but a number of them came back again. I was close by ASA POLLARD when he was killed. The ball struck the ground and hopped along before it struck him. Mr. BENJAMIN BALDWIN rolled him up in a blanket, and they carried him off and buried him. I do not remember anything more of any great importance. I saw a good deal and remembered a great deal, but it is not worth writing, that I know of. It appears to me the blood was running down his (WARREN'S) arm or side when he spoke the words, but we were all in such a hurry I won't be certain about that. I shall send an order for my money under the resolve. I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

AMOS FOSTER.

The Sunken Ships at Sebastopol.

From the Boston Traveller, 10th.

No ships-of-war have yet been raised, but the Boston Submarine Company have been at work upon an eighty-four gun ship. This ship has become deeply imbedded in the mud, the Russians before scuttling her having placed heavy granite blocks upon her decks to prevent injury to the vessel from the shot of the enemy.

All this granite has been recovered, together with a large amount of other material, sufficient to leave a surplus after paying expenses, the share of the Gowen Company and of the Russians. In regard to the ship, the Gwinn pump was used and actually drew up water from the hold of the vessel, at a distance of forty-six feet from the surface at the rate of seventy thousand gallons a minute, without starting the vessel. The commander of the expedition is confident, however, that with the use of pontoons or bags of India-rubber filled with air, introduced into the hold, they shall be more successful.

The Gowen Company, it is also stated, have been quite successful in raising material, or which there are millions in amount upon the bottom, and neither party have, so far as known, the slightest intention of abandoning the undertaking.

Up to the 4th of November the weather had been extremely pleasant, and on that day they were sitting at open windows eating blackberries.

The Russian Government, it is stated, still look with favor upon this famous city, and are energetically at work to restore to it something of its former strength and efficiency. Next Spring the Grand Duke CONSTANTINE, and others of the Imperial family, will visit the place, to superintend the operations of rebuilding, &c.

One of the vessels of the Boston Submarine Company was at Constantinople taking in coal and provisions with which to return to Sebastopol. This does not look like an abandonment of the expedition.

MLLE. RACHEL'S HEALTH.—The Memorial Bordelais publishes the following letter from Mlle. SARAH FELIX to her brother, RAPHAEL FELIX, dated Cannes, Oct. 29:

MY DEAR BROTHER: RACHEL is much better. Providence led me to listen to the counsels of a strange lady, who wrote to me that her daughter had been saved by Dr. BERGONNIER, after being given up by five other physicians. Our doctor had but the day before expressed the opinion that RACHEL'S case was hopeless. We sent for Dr. BERGONNIER, who forthwith commenced his painful treatment, which consists in expelling the inflammation. For the last three days she has slept well—a rare occurrence in the last two years. The doctor assures us she will be able to resume her vocation. The days of miracles are not yet past, I kiss thee, thy sister,

SARAH.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

Supreme Court of the United States.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 9.

WM. HENDERSON, Esq., of Indiana, CHARLES J. M. GWINN, and ROBERT M. MCLEAN, Esqs., of Maryland, were admitted attorneys and counselors of this Court.

No. 5.—Adolphus Durant, appellant, vs. Samuel Lawrence et al. The argument of this cause was continued by Messrs. MERWIN and LORING for the appellees.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.—Dec. 11.

Before Hon. Justice Davies.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC ORPHAN ASYLUM GRANT—INJUNCTION AGAINST THE COMMON COUNCIL—ARGUMENT ON THE INJUNCTION—MOTION DENIED.

Orvin Terry vs. The Mayor &c. of New-York.—It will be remembered that some time since a grant was proposed in the Common Council, to be made, giving to the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum half a block of land adjoining the present Asylum in Fifty-first-street, at the nominal rent of $1 per year. A few days ago we published a notice that this plaintiff, as a tax-payer, had obtained an order to show cause why the Mayor &c. should not be restrained by injunction from conveying the property in question, and the Asylum from receiving it. Yesterday morning the matter came up pursuant to agreement.

Mr. Joseph Blunt appeared for the plaintiff, Messrs. O'Conor, Brady and Glover for the Asylum, and Mr. Busteed, Corporation Counsel, for the City.

Mr. Glover first read the affidavit of Dines Carolin, a trustee of the Asylum, which set forth in substance that from the year 1852 to 1856 he had been Treasurer of the Asylum; that for nearly forty years the Trustees of the Asylum have maintained an Asylum for Orphans at the corner of Mott and Prince streets; that for the last six years they have maintained a separate Asylum for orphan boys, between Fifty first and Fifty-second streets, and fronting on Fifth avenue, on which premises they have erected a large brick building, at the expense of $50,000; that these institutions are supported principally by voluntary contributions, together with some assistance from the State; that the orphans thus maintained would have been thrown upon the public treasury, and taxes thereby increased; that in 1846 a lease of the premises on Fourth-avenue was made to the Asylum during the pleasure of the Common Council, but in consequence of such uncertain tenure no buildings or improvements could safely be erected thereon, and yet more room and greater accommodation were needed for the benefit of the orphan children; that the corporation making the grant were not induced by corrupt motives, as alleged in the complaint, and that deponent did not offer, or agree directly or indirectly, to give or pay to any person any money in respect to the application.

Mr. Blunt then read the complaint setting forth the expense which the proposed gift would occasion the City. On this ground, as well as on the illegality of the proceedings, he claimed that the injunction should be granted.

Mr. Busteed said he would like to know who Mr. Terry was, and how much tax he annually paid. Such complaints unfortunately were too common at the present time in our Courts. No injunction should be issued against the Corporation or the Comptroller. The lease was not void, for the Corporation had authority to lease and demise its own lands at its own pleasure. This power had often been exercised for charitable and other purposes.

Mr. O'Conor followed, claiming the right of the City to rent its own lands in such manner as they deemed best.

His Honor remarked that it had been contended that the lease in question was void. If so, the plaintiff was not damnified, and hence there would be no necessity for the injunction.

Mr Blunt said that the Corporation Counsel contended that the lease was a valid one. The suitor had a right to know whether the Legislature could pass an act restricting such transfer of the property pledged by the City, or whether it could not. No lease could hereafter be given for more than ten years, as might be seen by the act of the Legislature on the subject. If real estate could be granted at a nominal rent perpetually, annuities and sums of money could in the same manner be granted out of the treasury, which would increase the already heavy burden upon the tax-payers. The Court would carefully consider a question of such importance as this. If the restraining act was unconstitutional the people of New-York would respond to the call of the oppressed minority of this City, and alter the Constitution so as to prevent that minority being deprived of their property by such a grant as this one.

His Honor stated that he should assume that the restraining act of the Legislature, as argued by Mr. Blunt, was valid. The grant of the Corporation for a time exceeding ten years would, therefore, be invalid, and convey no title to the premises, and accordingly no tax-payer could be damnified. The motion for an injunction, therefore, he should deny with $10 costs.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Justice Bosworth.

DECISIONS.

PRACTICE EXAMINATION DE BENE ESSE—HOW AVOIDED.

The Accessory Transit Co. vs. Varrison.—Motion for an order for the examination of a witness de bene esse. It was opposed on the ground that the witness—Mr. Easton—was not about to leave the State, nor was he so ill as to occasion apprehension for his life.

BOSWORTH, J.—When at the instance of one party an order is made under 3 R. S., 392, sec. 3, requiring such adverse party to appear and attend the de bene esse examination of a witness, such adverse party may show by proof that the witness is not about to depart from the State, or that he is not sick or infirm, so as to afford reasonable ground for apprehension that he will not be able to attend the trial of the suit in which it is proposed to examine him, and then the application or order will be dismissed. That has been shown in this case. The application to examine Mr. Easton now is dismissed, but may be renewed whenever facts are shown to exist giving right the to have him examined.

MARINE COURT—DEC. 11.

Before Judge Thompson.

SUIT FOR SLANDER.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sanford vs. James Cochrane.—The plaintiff, a widow woman, sued the defendant James Cochrane for slanderous words used by him, to the effect that she was an improper woman, and, as such, was living upon the bounty of a certain man. The Judge decided for the plaintiff, and gave $500 damages.

Trial of James Shepherd for Arson.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before Honorable Recorder Smith.

The trial of James Shepherd was continued yesterday. The court room was crowded, and great interest was manifested in the proceedings.

Peter Bogert was the first witness. He deposed that he saw the fire on the night in question. He saw Shepherd coming out of the front door. He cried out "The Dutch have burnt my wife!" He had pantaloons and a shirt on. He was dancing round the street, as if excited. Witness went upstairs in the burning building by the front door. The fire was dropping from the roof to the floor of the upper story. Witness looked in the room and shouted. There was no reply made. There was something like a bed laying on the floor in the northeast corner of the room. Witness went down stairs, and broke in the window in the rear on the second story. There was nothing there but a bureau. Witness then went round and broke open the front window of the second story. There was nothing there but the bundle or bed before alluded to. Geyer was coming out of the house with his bed. Shepherd was still dancing about, and crying "The Dutch have burnt my wife; let me go." Witness said to those who were holding Shepherd, "Let the fool go, he doesn't want to go into the fire." The police then came and took him. Witness had known Shepherd and his wife for about a year. He had heard them quarrel. Shepherd had told witness he was building a house at Harlem, and that he was going to move there.

The cross-examination of this witness was immaterial.

Catharine Howey was next examined: She said she was a cousin of Mrs. Shepherd, and last saw her the Thursday before she was burned; Mrs. Shepherd bought the lease of the place, and she and her husband lived there two years; they did not seem to be happy together; witness was in one day when they quarrelled; she attempted to interfere, but Mrs. Shepherd prevented her; Mrs. Shepherd was a strong, active woman, and appeared to be healthy when witness last saw her; she was temperate in her habits; witness thought that Shepherd did not speak pleasantly to her.

On cross-examination, the witness said she had had difficulty with Shepherd because he was not kind to her cousin. Shepherd and his wife attended prayer meetings at witness' house.

John McGuire, a watchmaker at Harlem, deposed—That the prisoner left a watch with him after the fire in the name of Robinson.

Nelson Palmer, pastor of the Baptist Church at Harlem, deposed—That Shepherd, alluding to the fire, said that he escaped by jumping from the second story window, and urged his wife to do the same, but that she would not do so; Shepherd borrowed a trunk from witness the very day before the fire, which he brought back filled with various articles, and left it in his (witness') care.

Lucy Keesban testified—That on the day of the fire she was in Rev. Mr. Palmer's house, and saw Mrs. Palmer take from the trunk, left by Shepherd, a quantity of wearing apparel, including women's and children's clothes.

William Leuzenbee was examined—Beyond proving the unhappy relations which existed between Shepherd and his wife, his evidence was not material.

Robert Dickey deposed—That on one occasion he was in Shepherd's house, when Shepherd showed him an insurance policy, and said he meant to burn down the house and burn his wife at the same time; he laughed when he said so; he was not in liquor.

Magdalena Pieck was the next witness. She saw the fire; from her window she could look into Shepherd's room. She saw something like a bundle burning in the room; she waked the neighbors, and the roof burst into a blaze; last year, one night, she heard Mrs. Shepherd crying "Fire, watch;" the fire, on June 9, was in the middle of Shepherd's room; when she first saw it, it was not higher than a table.

On cross-examination this witness said that, on the night when Mrs. Shepherd cried "Watch, fire," Shepherd followed her into the yard with a stick, and said to her "I'll strike you till you're down."

Thomas L. Chester, Secretary of the Commonwealth Insurance Company, deposed that the insurance on Shepherd's house was effected on July 17, 1850; after the fire Shepherd came to the office of witness, acting like a crazy man; he said, "it is all over, my poor frow is gone"; witness calmed him, and asked how the fire occurred; he replied that it broke out in the room below; that when he discovered it he got up, and called his wife; she did not come, and he jumped out of the window; witness told him to hand in a statement of his loss as soon as possible; he said, "it is all gone," meaning all his property.

The Assistant District-Attorney read to the Jury Shepherd's statement of his loss, which he handed to the Insurance Company. He claimed $391 for house, furniture and wearing apparel.

Jane Ball was next examined—She had known Mr. and Mrs. Shepherd three or four years; they did not, in her judgment, live very happily together.

Louisa Hetter was examined by the prosecution—She lived close to Shepherd, and was aroused by the cry of "Fire"; she saw the house burning in the upper part; on going to the street half an hour afterwards, the house was destroyed.

Alfred S. Baker, Fire Marshal, deposed that a box shown him by the District-Attorney was obtained by him from Shepherd's residence at Harlem; when he reached the spot where the fire took place, the house was destroyed; the firemen were searching in the ruins; after the firemen had left, witness continued the search and found the body; the upper part was terribly burnt; the heart protruded from between the ribs, the lower jaw was gone; the body was taken to the Station-house, where witness found Shepherd; he had on only a shirt and pantaloons, but no shoes; he said he was woke up at 12 o'clock by the Dutchman Geyer talking low below stairs; he went to sleep again, and was woke by his wife, who said, "My God, Jim, the house is on fire"; he slipped on his pantaloons and tried to open the front window, but the smoke came in so that he could not get out; he then opened the door, but still the smoke rushed in too strong; he then opened the back window, and tried to get his wife out of it, but she refused to go, saying she should kill herself; he then jumped out and never saw his wife again till he saw her remains in the Station-house; he said all his own and all his wife's property was destroyed, including a gold watch which his wife had; he had looked in the ruins for it, but said he was told by a child that a German had found the remains of the watch and chain and gone off with it.

The prosecution here rested their case, reserving the right to call another witness.

Ex-Justice Pearsey having opened the case to the Jury for the defence, proceeded to call witnesses for the prisoner.

John L. Taylor was first examined. He deposed that he was a master builder; he estimated the value of the house occupied by Shepherd, according to the specifications furnished him, at $450; he never saw the house, but, if the specifications were correct, such was the value of the building.

The building, it will be remembered, was only insured by Shepherd for $275.

In reply to the Recorder the witness stated that he had estimated the cost of such a house, built entirely of new materials, though of the commonest kind. The difference between the price he had then estimated and the cost of second-hand material would not be great, inasmuch as second-hand materials that would be offered for sale, must be of the best kind, and fully as good as the commonest kind of new materials.

The Court here adjourned till the morning at 11 o'clock.

CIRCUIT COURT, BROOKLYN.—Judge EMOTT yesterday morning discharged the Jurors until Monday morning, when the following Calendar will be called: Nos. 22, 84, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 35, 82, 67, 75, 83.

Suicides.

A merchant of Cincinnati, named Johnson, sprang overboard from the ferry-boat which plies between Cincinnati and Covington, on the 7th inst. He had failed in business, and was so beset by creditors that life became insufferable. The Times gives an incident of his misfortunes. "Reduced to the most limited circumstances, with a large family looking to him for support, he still toiled on. Erecting a mere shed upon the scene of his former property, he engaged in a business that required but limited capital, and gave more of his attention to it than could have been expected from one having so little hope of ease and comfort in the future. Notwithstanding all that he had done, given up everything, ruined himself in his business and property, he was still heartlessly pursued by the aforesaid creditors. At one time they levied upon a few old casks, used by him in his humble calling, and upon all occasions allowed no opportunity to escape by which they could render his situation most wretched."

A man named WILLIAM THOMPSON died in Philadelphia, on the 9th, from the effects of laudanum. The deceased was a milkman, and for some time past gave evidence of a melancholy state of mind. His wife stated that on many occasions latetate he seemed to think that the world was down on him; everything went wrong; he struggled hard to make an honest living, and met with reverses; his friends seemed to have forsaken him, and while in this gloomy state of mind his horse died suddenly, and this seemed completely to unnerve him, and he gave up to despair.

On the 29th ult., Miss OLEAN TAYLOR, a young lady, residing at New-Albany, Ohio, committed suicide by hanging herself in her room. Her parents had left her to take care of her younger brothers and sisters, while they attended church, and shortly after their departure, she gave the children permission to visit a neighboring family. When her parents returned, search was made for her and she was found in her room, dead, having used a leather strap by tying it to the bed post. Miss TAYLOR was twenty-two years of age.

On the 9th inst., a prisoner in the Essex County (N. J.) jail, named ROBERT S. CUNDIT, committed suicide by cutting his throat with a pocket-knife, severing the blood vessels on the left side of the neck in such a manner that death ensued from hemorrhage in about five minutes afterwards.

John Routon, a farmer in Morgan County, Mo., committed suicide by blowing his brains out with a rifle, on Monday of last week. He was found lying across the gun with the ramrod in his hand, with which it is supposed he fired his gun.

Miscellaneous Items.

The house of one Brooking, at Gardiner, Me., was burned on Saturday night, and in the cellar, after the fire, were found $3,000 in gold and silver, fused by the heat. The old man has been in the habit of hiding his money in stone heaps and walls on the farm where he lives, and a long stocking full of silver coin was found in a stone heap, by his brother, a short time ago. At the time of the fire he had $600 in bills, and the silver and gold found in the cellar, stowed away under the chamber floor, next to the fastening. It was a sight to behold (says a correspondent) to see the old miser frantically calling upon the bystanders to shoot him.

In a Missouri town a lad aged ten years, named John Conrad Heidenreich, was murdered by a lad of about the same age named Theodore Danjars. The former was returning to the house of his father, with a piece of wood and a basket of chips, and was within a few rods of his home when the last named lad claimed the wood and demanded it. It was refused, and the little claimant attempted to take it by force. The other resisted, and was thrown down. His assailant proving more powerful, planted a knee firmly upon his throat, and holding him helpless, choked him.

The citizens of Lewes, Del., are moving in favor of an appropriation for building a pier at Cape Henlopen. During every easterly storm vessels from all the seaboard States of the Union seek shelter under the breakwater, and are forced to obtain provisions and other needed articles at an enormous expense on account of the difficulty of transportation from the shore to the har

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Associated Banks of the City of New-York unanimously resolved last night to resume payments in specie on all their obligations this day. The determination was not generally known in advance, but the price of Gold being only one-quarter to one-half of one per cent. premium, the full restoration of the Specie standard will make little alteration in the exchange. American Coin is brought down to par. The discount on the country circulation of this State and New-England will be the same as before, and private information having been received from Boston that the Banks in that city are prepared to follow the movement here, all the Banks (except those of Rhode Island) in New-England, and all in the State of New-York, will at once be restored to the position they occupied sixty days ago.

Up to the time of going to press this morning, nothing had been seen of the Europa at Sandy Hook. If she left Liverpool on her advertised day of sailing, Nov. 28, she is now in her fourteenth day.

The Star of the West from Aspinwall, with the California passengers and mails of the 20th of November, is expected to arrive here on Monday or Tuesday. The substance of her news, however, may be hourly expected by telegraph from New-Orleans.

Dispatches were yesterday received at the War Department from Col. JOHNSON, of the Utah expedition, dated South Pass, Oct. 18, conveying intelligence of the same tenor as that received by way of St. Louis. The greatest exertions were being made to form a junction of the different branches of the expedition, prior to going into Winter quarters, but serious delay was experienced from the cold and snow. Col. MAGRAW, of the South Pass Wagon-Road Expedition, had tendered a number of men, with fifteen good teams of mules and wagons, which had been accepted, and would be of great service in the emergency. Several of the supply trains were yet behind, with provisions and clothing, of which the advance were greatly in need. The most important of Col. JOHNSON'S dispatches will be found under our telegraphic head.

Matters have taken another turn in Mexico. Advices have been received from the city to the 4th inst., telegraphed from New-Orleans, which represent the position of the Government as decidedly better than at the date of those previously received. The reactionary forces, had been defeated at Puebla and other points, and COMONFORT and the Supreme Court were formally installed on the 1st.

The Court of Appeals of New-Jersey, yesterday, affirmed the judgment of the Supreme Court in the case of DONNELLY, found guilty of the murder of MOSES at the Sea View House. Notice was immediately given of an application to be made to the Court of Pardons, for a pardon or commutation. DONNELLY is sentenced to be executed on the 8th of January, and this is his only hope.

The topsail schooner Sarah C. Shields from Philadelphia, bound to Boston, with a cargo of coal, went ashore on Southampton Beach, L. I., on Wednesday morning at 3 o'clock, during a dense fog, and is likely to prove a total loss. The officers and crew were rescued with much difficulty, by the persons having charge of Life-boat Station No. 20. Also, a large hermaphrodite brig, name unknown, painted black, with bright waist, ran ashore the same night on the West side of Gardner's Island, where she was seen, broadside on, yesterday morning. The crew were seen to land on the beach.

The steamer Connecticut, in consequence of the strong westerly gale of Thursday night remained at New-London until yesterday forenoon, and arrived here early in the evening.

The Board of Aldermen passed a resolution last evening, directing the Receiver to remove the Crystal Palace by the 1st of May, 1858. A resolution was passed appointing a Committee to investigate and report whether Mr. HOGG, Central Park Commissioner, had made improper use of his office in inducing men to vote for a particular party at the last election.

Before the Councilmen's Committee on a Foundling Hospital, yesterday, Dr. WYNNE read a paper of much interest, detailing the history of such institutions and presenting some important statistics concerning illegitimate births in various countries, with the deductions that thinking people have drawn from them.

The Police Commissioners met yesterday, Mayor WOOD alone being absent. After some routine business, the application of several parties to act as patrolmen in the department, free of pay until regularly employed, was rejected. Mr. BEEBE, on the part of 600 of the old police, called upon the Board to instruct their counsel to confer with him as to the facts to be laid before the Court on the question of the legality of the dismissal of the Municipal Police. After some discussion, the Board instructed General NYE to act in the matter, and then resolved itself into secret session.

Judge DAVIES yesterday denied the motion for an injunction restraining the Common Council from granting certain lands to the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum.

Mr. HORACE GREELEY delivered a very refreshing lecture last evening at Clinton Hall, on Poets and Poetry. The lecturer reviewed the whole field from JOB to ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING, and treated many generally held sacred with great freedom and with his mittens off. HOMER he confessed a bore; SHAKESPEARE was a toady and a Tory; POPE an easy verse-writer; but MILTON, BURNS, Mrs. HEMANS, TENNYSON, and the BROWNINGS, shone up as his favorites. The house was full and the original style of criticism finely enjoyed.

The General Produce Markets, yesterday, were heavily stocked with Flour, prices of which leaned in favor of buyers, yet these did not purchase freely. The home trade were the leading operators. Wheat was in good request at an advance of about 2c. ₱ bushel on previous figures. The supply and sales of Corn were moderate, and factors realized pretty buoyant prices. Provisions continued depressed and steadily favored purchasers. There was more animation in the Grocery trade, both privately and at public sales. Cotton varied very slightly. Freights were rather brisker and firmer.

FERDINAND WEHRMANN, a clerk in the wholesale fancy goods store No. 43 Maiden-lane, was arrested, yesterday, charged with embezzling $2,000 in money and goods belonging to his employers. The man to whom he sold the goods was also arrested, and both held for examination.

CHARLES GILMORE, a young man living in Brooklyn, committed suicide yesterday morning at the Western Hotel in Cortlandt-street. He took a room the night previous at the hotel, and put an end to his existence by taking laudanum. The impelling cause has not yet been ascertained. The deceased was a nephew of Ald. GRIFFITHS of the 10th Ward.

ANOTHER PARTY ORGAN.—It is rumored that the newly elected printers to Congress are to start a new Democratic newspaper at Washington. The Richmond South, which is pleased at the prospect, as the new paper will be of the fire-eating school, remarks that hitherto the public printing has been considered a mere private emolument, without any "attendant obligations to the party." We are inclined to think that "the party" will be glad to compromise this obligation before the new paper has been published long. Nothing is more fatal to a party than an assortment of "organs."

The Kansas Snarl.

The Kansas question is becoming more and more involved every day. Current events, both at Washington and in the Territory, are so entangling the knot that it will soon become utterly impossible to untie it,—and before the session is half over, unless we are much mistaken, all parties, the President included, will be very glad to avail themselves of the services of Senator DOUGLAS to find a way out of the labyrinth in which they are likely to become bewildered.

Just now the sudden disappearance of Governor WALKER is the topic of discussion. Only a night or two since he was entertaining the Dutchmen at the St. Nicholas with a speech upon the Union and the necessity of standing by the Democratic principle of Popular Sovereignty. But before the smoke from their pipes had cleared away he had vanished, and has not been seen since that time by his anxious Custom-house friends. It was at first supposed he had gone to Washington,—but our telegrams from that City report that his non-appearance there has created even more alarm there than his disappearance here. The horrible suspicion is hinted in official quarters that he has started direct for Kansas,—and that he does not intend that Secretary DENVER shall become acting Governor, until President BUCHANAN gives him official notice of his dismissal. We hope this report is true. It would have been a great deal better for Governor WALKER, as well as for Kansas and the country, if he had never left his post of official duty:—and the sooner he can return to it the sooner will the mischiefs of his leaving it be repaired. If the President has any fresh instructions to send him, he probably knows his Post-Office address.

But a still more curious and inexplicable movement is that connected with the rumored call for an Extraordinary Session of the Legislature. It is reported that Secretary STANTON, as acting Governor, has issued such a call—and upon this report, received by telegraph, it is also reported that President BUCHANAN has removed him from office—under the impression, doubtless, that he was aiding and abetting resistance to the sovereignty of the Lecompton Convention, for which Mr. BUCHANAN has swapped off the popular sovereignty of the Cincinnati platform. It would be a little curious if Mr. STANTON'S action should prove to have been quite on the other side; and as yet we do not see how he can possibly have done anything else. It is assumed that he has called an extra session of the Legislature, elected in October last. But this cannot be, for that Legislature has as yet no legal existence,—unless an entirely different rule has been established by the Legislature of Kansas, from that which prevails in any other State. In this State, for example, the members elected to the Legislature in November last, do not become actual members until the commencement of the legislative year and the regular session, in January next;—and if the Governor were to order an extra session to-morrow it would be composed of the members of the present Legislature, who could not be superseded until the expiration of their terms of office. Now in Kansas, the regular sessions of the Legislature commence on the first Wednesday of January in each year. The present Legislature, therefore, is composed of the members elected in October, 1856,—and they cannot be superseded by those who were elected in October, 1857, until the commencement of the legislative year in January, 1858.

Unless, therefore, there is some special provision in the Territorial law which would bring the newly-elected Legislature at once into power, Mr. STANTON can only have summoned an extra session of the Pro-Slavery "bogus" Legislature elected in October, 1856, by Pro-Slavery votes alone, as the Free-State men refused to take any part in the election. We can scarcely believe that he has been dismissed from office by the President for this offence.

But the fact is, there was not the slightest necessity for an extra session of any Legislature, and Mr. STANTON acted unwisely if he summoned one. The regular session commences early in January, and then the Free-State Legislature, elected in October last, would have been able to take action upon the whole subject, long before Congress will have done anything decisive with the Lecompton Constitution.

The Free-State men in Kansas seem to be acting quite as absurdly as possible,—and even more foolishly than could reasonably have been expected under the circumstances. Instead of taking ground upon the broad principle of Popular Sovereignty, in which they would have been joined by the great body of the Democrats of Kansas and sustained by the Democracy of the whole country, they have rallied on the narrow and effete Topeka platform. They take special pains to repel the support which they were likely to receive from beyond the limits of their own party. The whole Topeka movement was illegal and revolutionary. It lacked even the technical show of law which gives a quasi validity to the Lecompton movement. It is a thing of the past,—as dead as the Dorr rebellion—and has long ago been abandoned by all who care more for principle and the good of Kansas than for their partisan objects and their own personal aggrandizement.

Everybody must see that the attempt to force the Lecompton Constitution upon the people of Kansas will lead to civil commotion, and perhaps bloodshed, in the Territory, and to the entire disruption of political parties in the country at large. The only way of escaping all these difficulties, and cutting the Kansas knot, is by an Enabling act which shall authorize a new Convention, and take effectual measures for embodying the popular will in a new Constitution. No party could, with any show of reason, object to such a step:—no practical execution would consume less time and involve less trouble than the action now proposed, and it would put the whole controversy forever at rest. We are glad to see that Senator DOUGLAS proposes to introduce such a bill at an early day.

Important Money Movements.

The Banks in this City, which, since the first of the present month, have been practically paying Specie on their obligations, have now resolved unanimously to resume such payments in full, from and after this day. The suspension in form has lasted just sixty days, but during most of the time, the premium on Gold in the market over other current bankable funds, has not ranged above one-half of one per cent. The Country Banks of New-York have been redeeming their circulation in the City since the 19th of November, and City funds being now brought to the full standard again, the Banks of the whole State of New-York are, this day, paying Specie on their Circulation and Deposits.

The announcement will create no great surprise; since, after the preliminary arrangements, looking to this result and announced at the close of November, and followed by a very large accession to the Gold reserve, the question of time was reduced to a brief period, and the difference of exchange between paper and Gold brought down to the smallest fraction. The unanimity of the movement, however, and the fact that it takes place, with all safety and practicability amidst about the largest export demand for Specie, for the month, we have ever had, is equally creditable to the resources of the country, and a most encouraging sign of returning prosperity. It is the more significant, because the measure was not pressed upon the Banks by the public, nor was it likely to be prematurely forced upon them by the Legislature. Some distrust on the point of unanimity among themselves, and possibly as to the good intention of the State authorities, appears to have been felt by two or three Bank officers, who published their separate purpose to resume on Monday in one of the evening papers of yesterday. But their suspicions, if not wholly unauthorized, were at least premature, as, notwithstanding their own absence from the Clearing-House last night, the purpose of full redemption was carried out on the instant.

The present specie strength of the Banks has been greatly assisted by the operations of the Federal Treasury. Of the $26,000,000 which they held on Monday, at least $8,000,000 was derived from the Sub-Treasury here, and $4,000,000 indirectly from other depositories of the Government. The transfers were purposely hastened by Secretary COBB before the the suspension of the New-York Banks in October. The relief, though liberal as well as timely, was unavailing then, but has since been appreciated. The $12,000,000 transferred to the Banks will not be required again by the Government in Specie for some time to come. The Treasury Notes to which the Secretary will now resort to supply temporarily the deficiency of revenue, will be equally serviceable to the Banks in sustaining the payments in specie to which they now return, and useful to the general business of the country. The arrangement altogether will prove far more acceptable at the present time than a Government loan; the proceeds of which would go immediately into the Sub-Treasury in coin, temporarily unsettling the Bank reserve.

We have some reason to believe that the usefulness of the Federal Treasury, at the present juncture, will not stop with the issue of Treasury Notes for general circulation. The Depositories of the Government are, probably, to be more freely used by the public as offices of general deposit, exchange and transfer; excluding, of course, the use of all Bank Notes, but issuing Certificates of Deposit on Gold, for employment as a medium of exchange from one end of the country to the other. The amendments to the Sub-Treasury system to answer this object would be slight, and at the present time, unobjectionable to Congress.

University Education.

Professor BLACKIE, of Edinburg—a Scotch professor of some distinction, recently took occasion, in delivering the opening lecture of his course at the commencement of the session, to draw a comparison between the Scotch and English Universities anything but flattering to the former. His remarks have excited a good deal of attention on the other side of the water, not so much because of the interest felt on the subject more immediately under discussion as because of their practical bearing upon the general question of University education.

Mr. BLACKIE finds the Universities of his own country inferior to those of England as regards the students, the subjects of study, the discipline, the academical constitution and government, and the encouragement and rewards of scholarship, or in other words, in almost every item which makes up the sum of a really valuable college education. The Scotch students he pronounces to be mere scholboys, totally unfitted by previous training or acquirements to derive any benefit from the lectures of a professor, so that they are either unable to keep pace with him or he is obliged to turn schoolmaster to adapt himself to their capacities. As regards the subjects of study, while he condemns that extravagant and exclusive devotion to the ancient classics for which Cambridge and Oxford are famous, he finds on the other hand an evil still more crying in the pitiful subserviency of the Scotch curriculum to the lowest requirements of professional success, in the poorest of professions. He quotes a mass of testimony in support of the assertion that it is only through the literature of the ancients that the highest intellectual culture is to be attained, and that however little antiquity may do to qualify a man for meeting the common-place demands of every-day life, its value in making profound thinkers and erudite theologians, does not admit of dispute.

Judging the two systems by their results, the English stands upon the loftiest vantage ground. Scotland produces each year a swarm of poor doctors and poorer clergymen, with just enough attainments to enable them to exact pence and respect from a people famous for a blind worship of knowledge, small or great. But no great lights, either in theology or philosophy, have in modern times issued from any of the universities of which all Scotchmen are so proud. Sir WILLIAM HAMILTON, who is the only recent addition which Scotland has made to the illustrious roll of scholars and metaphysicians which she produced in the latter half of the last century and the commencement of this, was educated in Oxford. She has many eminent pulpit orators, but it would be difficult to mention one of the alumni of her colleges, educated within the last thirty years, whose name would attract the slightest notice by the side of "the long series"—to use Professor BLACKIE'S words—"of profound theologians, exact philologers, and highly cultivated gentlemen," whom Oxford and Cambridge send forth almost every year. The learned Professor sums up his vigorous invective by claiming for his own colleges the glory of fulfilling the original design of all universities, by providing for the very poor a course of instruction more in accordance with the wants of the times, than their wealthier or more illustrious sisters; but beyond claiming this barren and bootless honor, he has little to say in praise. He deplores with a bitterness of feeling, into which all must enter who admire profound scholarship, and sympathise with its ambition and its discontent, the gradual decline which has converted the once famous halls of Edinburg and Glasgow and of Aberdeen into seminaries for converting half-taught schoolboys into blundering doctors, and uncouth and illiterate pastors.

There can be no question that the tendency in the matter of education at the present day is, and no where more than in our own country, to sacrifice solid training, and solid acquirements, to the too often empty glory of a graduate's degree. Our young men are in such desperate haste to become students that they dispense with being schoolboys, and present themselves for admission to our colleges in a state of preparation which ought in the senior class of any good school to be deemed discreditable. An University which even attempts to be what it ought to be, bases all its arrangements, both of discipline and of instruction, upon the presumption that those who claim its advantages are not only in possession of the powers of early manhood, but of the habit of application, and of continuous thought, bred by a course of solid preliminary training. They suppose their alumni not only to be capable of great voluntary exertion, and actuated by the ambition which is at once the earliest and noblest passion of virility, but to have attained a certain degree of proficiency in every branch of knowledge they propose to pursue. The professor should find his pupils ready to start with him from the very outposts of science. He ought to be the leader of trained soldiers, thirsting for victory. As matters stand in the great majority of the swarm of shams, called "universities," with which we are so plentifully supplied, he finds himself at the head of awkward squads, to whom the goose step is still an unfamiliar movement. The result is that the Universities are either compelled to turn themselves into a sort of high school, or see their halls empty. In the majority of cases they are not disposed to sacrifice themselves in the cause of learning, and accept their humble rôle with as good a grace as possible. The professors, unable to bring the students up to their level, gradually sink to the level of the students, and they both plod along in that obscure and ignoble track which has ended in making many of our "degrees" a synonym for childish absurdity, and has deluged the country with bachelors without arts, and doctors without doctrine.

Our Commerce with France.

The Emperor LOUIS NAPOLEON, since his accession to power, has shown himself disposed to relieve his country of the incubus imposed upon her energies by the prohibitive policy to which the various governments of France have adhered, with a kind of traditional obstinacy, ever since its first introduction, by COLBERT, in 1667. Every modification of that policy in a liberal sense has been followed by such immediate results of good, and the whole commercial history of France pleads so eloquently against the doctrines of restriction, that this disposition of NAPOLEON to overthrow the system transmitted by his predecessors may not be thought to indicate any very extraordinary administrative capacity. But it must be remembered that experience, although the best, and, perhaps, because it is the best, of teachers, is of all teachers the least heeded by the masses of any community; and in contending against the theory of prohibitive protection to French industry, the Emperor is dealing with notions which have become a kind of commercial religion in France. This is so true that the realization of the Imperial convictions has been limited to merely tentative experiments, the results of which cannot, in the nature of things, be expected to be satisfactory. Commerce abhors provisional arrangements, and relaxations determinable by a concurrence of circumstances quite beyond human foresight. Thus the Emperor attempted in 1854 to relax the prohibitions on the importation of foreign grain and cattle, but his ordinances to that effect were provisional in their phraseology, and those of our merchants who have ever been "nipped" by the sudden revocation of similar relaxations under the commercial régime of the Island of Cuba, will readily understand why the French importations of these most necessary articles should not have been materially benefited by measures of such a temporary and uncertain scope. So, too, it has been with the effort made during the Eastern war to quicken the movement of the French marine. Under the system of prohibitive protection to French materials and skill in ship-building, the commercial navy of France had fallen far behind its great rivals in England and America. When 1814 brought peace again to the seas, the French marine registered 600,000 tons. In 1856 it had risen to a little over 800,000. During the same period the tonnage of England and America had grown to colossal proportions. We quadrupled our tonnage in the quarter of a century between 1830 and 1855, expanding from 1,200,000 to 5,000,000, and outrunning England, up to the epoch of the repeal of the English navigation laws in 1849, since which period the English marine has shown an accelerated increase in the rate of its development, and has already overtaken and passed us again in one department—that of ocean steam navigation. Moved by these spectacles, the French Government, three years ago, opened the field of competition to foreign ship-building, but only in a measure, and for a determinable period of time. Of course capital has not been permanently diverted in the direction of an enterprise which may be interrupted at any moment.

So far as the carrying trade between this country and France is concerned, the two nations stand now, by the operation of the treaty of 1822, on a fair footing. But there still exist in the tariff of France, and of course in our own, though to a less oppressive extent, restrictions upon the profitable intercourse between the countries which both can and should be removed, and it is to be hoped that the prominence which the President has given to this subject in his Message to Congress may stimulate the French Government into measures which are clearly demanded by the interests of both powers.

The burdens imposed by the French tariff upon the "raw materials" of industry are particularly obnoxious to the observations of Mr. BUCHANAN, and particularly unfavorable to our trade with France. The manufacture of cotton in France has by no means kept pace with the productive development of the Empire, as it might have done had the raw material been freely supplied. The same phenomenon is exhibited by the cotton manufactures in France, which is afforded by the woolen manufactures of our own country, and the remedy is as plain in the one case as in the other. In 1836 France consumed 118,000,000 pounds of cotton, against 86,000,000 consumed in the United States. With each successive year we gained on France, till in 1845 both nations stood at precisely the same figure of 158,000,000 pounds; since which time the relation has been reversed, and at present we consume 70,000,000 pounds in excess of France. More important, however, than the cotton question is the growing question of the trade in iron. The iron production of this country is now entering upon the most critical period of its history, and it should be an object of the first consequence to our statesmen to provide for the proper expansion of its commercial capabilities. The French duties upon iron are practically prohibitive along the whole line of the French frontier, except on the belt which stretches from Blanc-Misseron to Mont Genèvre, where the duty falls 3 francs per 100 kilogrammes. Every branch of French industry feels the paralyzing effects of this weight upon its developement, for iron is not less essential to the circulation of the whole industrial body than to the vital circulation of the human system. We have dwelt upon the trade in cotton and in iron with specific remark because of the leading importance of these articles to the export commerce, present and future, of the United States, as well as the industry of France, but it is impossible to glance over the schedules of French commerce without perceiving that the whole trade of France with this country is susceptible of a very great legitimate expansion under the operation of a more liberal commercial system. Most men habitually forget that, until within the last three hundred years, the maritime commerce of mankind bore a very inconsiderable proportion to their overland traffic, and nothing is more common than for those who confound trade with ships, to underestimate the commercial importance of France, when compared with England and the United States. But while England and the United States are geographically compelled into the position of traders by sea, France enjoys a vast continental intercourse with the nations of Europe, and in virtue of this intercourse, attains the second place among the nations of the earth. In 1855 the values of the foreign commerce of the three leading countries stood as follows, in round numbers:

England	$1,340,000,000
France	800,000,000
The United States	540,000,000

Our own share of the commerce of France in the same year amounted to $91,000,000, considerably less than one-third of the cotemporaneous value of our trade with England. Nor has the increase of our commerce with France kept pace with the growth of the commerce between France and Great Britain. In 1830, when England and France were fighting each other with duties, their mutual trade amounted to about $15,000,000. In the same year we exchanged with France to the value of nearly $19,000,000. The relaxation of hostile restrictions on either side of the channel has brought about a wonderful change. In 1855 the excess of the English over the American commerce with France was no less than $71,000,000.

Such a result as this in the face of the enormous development of our national capacity, both as producers and consumers, is certainly not satisfactory, and gives additional weight, if such were needed, to the animadversions of the President upon the state of our relations with France.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT IN KANSAS.—We give in another column a variety of extracts from the Democratic and Pro-Slavery journals in Kansas, concerning the recent action of the Lecompton Convention. It will be seen that out of all the papers in the Territory, but one defends that action and advocates its being sanctioned by Congress. Even the Kickapoo Pioneer, a zealous Pro-Slavery paper, declares that the refusal of the Convention to submit the Constitution to the popular vote has greatly injured the prospects of the Pro-Slavery Party, and united nearly the whole population in opposition to it.

A call has been issued also for a Democratic Convention to be held on the 24th inst., for the purpose of petitioning Congress to pass an enabling act, under which a new Constitution may be formed and submitted to the popular vote.

Now that the President has substantially repudiated the Democratic principle of Popular Sovereignty, the wishes and sentiments of the people of Kansas may have little weight with him. The great body of the party, however, may take a different view of the subject.

A NEEDFUL CAUTION.—Persons in quest of employment will do well to keep a sharp look-out for the swindling schemes that will be commended to their notice. The advertising columns of the City papers teem with seductive offers of all kinds,—offers of situations for which applicants must inclose a dollar,—offers to reveal some secret of certain success for pay,—offers to teach young ladies dentistry, or some other light and genteel occupary, or some other light and genteel occupation, &c., &c. In nine cases out of ten these proposals are the shifts of adventurers, where they are not the deliberate arts of designing scoundrels. It can do no harm for persons out of work to be on their guard against them.

A Hint to Dramatists.

Do any of our realors propose to write a play? The question is not entirely unprovoked, for there are a great many "gentlemen of leisure" among us just at this present time, and there is not a better established, or a more curious fact in human psychology than the tendency of gentlemen of leisure to write plays and novels. It was but the other day, indeed, that one of our cotemporaries favored the world with intelligence of an opera recently composed, words and music both, by a "littérateur of the Fifth-avenue," with the rather superfluous addition that the said littérateur was "entirely ignorant of the art of composition."

If, then, any "intending Shakespeare" should happen to glance over these columns, we beg to direct his particular attention to the very successful play which is now filling Mr. WALLACK'S Theatre. The "Poor of New-York" is by no means a Shakespearean drama, in point of literary merit, though it is cleverly written, and constructed with ingenious improbability. But it is thoroughly impregnated with the vitality of certain phases of New-York life. The plot, we hear, is of foreign birth, but it has been so naturalized that its nearest friends would hardly recognize it for a Parisian. It might be performed before a lodge of Know-Nothings. Indeed, like some other naturalized denizens of the land, its Americanism is sometimes pushed to the verge of extravagance, and it takes as many liberties with names and things as a brand-new citizen from Tipperary. But the secret of its success is worth studying, for it is the secret of all dramatic power over the masses of mankind. An imperfect mirror it may be, distorting, falsifying, but still a mirror it is, of the people who go to see it, and this is precisely what people wish a play to be. Do you suppose that any man, woman or child in this City can pass by a looking-glass without an inclination to look into it? True, we but glance and go and "straightway forget what manner of men we were," but the glance detained us, and we were glad to have had even that brief glimpse of our self-bewitching selves, and if we are not arrant humbugs, we can have no objection to owning the fact; and therefore it is that, for the sake of the New-York names and the New-York faces, the New-York memories and the New-York streets, the New-York slang and the New-York sentiment of the hour, the people willingly overlook the preposterousnesses of the constellated play of the "Poor of New-York." Cannot some one act upon the hint thus offered, and be at as much pains to build up a good drama, which shall interest us, as so many have expended upon dramas which had every good quality save this primal one, of a positive representative value?

Chance and Change.

Fortune, which already enjoys a considerable reputation for whimsicality, has just played two very droll freaks in her favorite city of Paris. She selected in the one case a broker, and in the other a chimney-sweep, as the subjects of her fancy, and experimented upon their emotions in the following manner: The broker one day lost a bundle of shares of the Zanzibar Coal Company, valued nominally at 100 francs each, but really susceptible of any sum to which they could be swelled by ingenious inflation. Things were showing an "upward tendency" when this accident occurred, so the broker advertised his thirty shares, and offered a reward of 100 francs for their safe return. Within three days the course of events changed, and stocks began to run down faster than the mouse in the nursery song of "Hiccory Diccory Doc." Immediately thereupon the unhappy broker's door was besieged by hordes of speculative gentlemen, each armed with a bundle of thirty shares of Zanzibar, and clamorous for the reward of 100 francs. At the last advices this victim of fortune was hesitating between the chances of a compromise, and the consolations of suicide. The chimney-sweeper's revulsion was of a very different kind. He was engaged to clean the flues of an old house in the Rue de Chérie, belonging to the city of Paris, and had begun operations by removing an old secretary from a spot in which it had stood undisturbed for over half a century. The secretary resented this revolutionary treatment, and fell to pieces accordingly, when certain bags were revealed in its inmost depths. These the chimney-sweep extracted, and found them to be like the Sibylline books in number, though of a clearer significance, for five of them contained each 7,000 and the four others each 8,000 six-franc pieces of the year 1791. Some of the bags bore the address of a long-departed bishop, M. DE GLANDEIRE, and the rest the name of a Parisian curé, and all of them were carefully tied up and sealed. They were evidently relics of the Reign of Terror, but as neither bishops nor curés could be expected to have direct heirs, and as no indirect heirs either could or did present themselves, the city of Paris and the chimney-sweeper have divided the treasure between them.

And we would willingly wager a reasonable sum that at this moment a brace or two of the geminal dramatists of Paris are working up a couple of entertaining Vaudevilles out of these two incidents of Parisian life.

A PARLIAMENTARY CANDIDATE RAISING A BREEZE.—The loyal Canadians are horrified at the conduct of Mr. ISAAC BUCHANAN, candidate for the new Provincial Parliament for the county of Huron. Conceiving that the British form of Government is unsuited to the wants of Canada, Mr. BUCHANAN, in an address to the Electors, declares himself in favor of the American system. The announcement of this conversion appears to affect our Canadian neighbors most unpleasantly. The unhappy candidate is treated to a prodigious array of large capitals of denunciatory quality, and receives a sound berating. Mr. BUCHANAN, however, wishes it to be distinctly understood that he does not propose to turn traitor to the Queen; simply claiming that a new system of Colonial Government is not incompatible with the integrity of the subject. He says the working of the Provincial Government since 1841 has involved the Province more and more deeply in debt; and there is some truth in the assertion, judging from the voluntary exhibits that have filled the Canadian press for a number of months past. Nevertheless, Mr. BUCHANAN is in hot water.

ALABAMA.—The Inaugural Address of Governor MOORE, of Alabama, promises the exercise of due vigilance over the best interests of the State, and arrives at the conclusion that "the recent Black Republican developments among the Professors in most of the Northern Colleges have convinced Southern parents of the impropriety of patronizing those institutions." Governor MOORE regards Banks as necessary evils, and holds that "the mad career of the Republican Party must be arrested," at any hazard. He winds up with a fierce attack on Governor WALKER.

Academy of Music.

VERDI'S opera of the "Traviata" was given here last night for the purpose, we imagine, of bringing VERDI into disrepute. It was weakly cast and weakly played even for the caste. The brilliant exception to this remark was Mme. LA GRANGE, who sang the rôle of the heroine with more than her usual ability. The other artists, including orchestra and chorus, were tame to a most depressing degree. If this is all Mr. ULLMAN can do with VERDI'S operas he had better confine himself to MEYERBEER. Of course the house was not well attended.

To-night there will be a performance of German opera—the inevitable "Martha," with Herr FORMES, M. PICANESER, Mme. LA GRANGE, Mme. BERRIL, &c., in the caste. It is a charming little work, and with this caste deserves to draw a crowded house, which it undoubtedly will.

IMMIGRANTS.—Five thousand five hundred have arrived at this port since the 1st of December. This will give an aggregate of 16,500 for the month.

Run About the Savings' Banks.

The run upon the Savings' Banks when the panic was at its height did not last long enough to do any serious injury to any of them, and those which suffered most have since very nearly made up their losses. Our reporter has made a run upon a large number of these institutions recently, with a view of collecting interesting particulars with regard to them. A great many incidents which illustrate human nature, necessarily fall frequently under the eye of the officers of Savings' Institutions. Poor people deposit in them what portion of their little earnings is left after their necessities have been provided for,—slowing away golden beams while the sun shines, to light their homes upon "a rainy day." People "well-to-do in the world" and desirous of doing better, put their surplus revenue into the same places of safe-keeping, and let it lie a comp und interest, instead of spending it for fashionable follies. People in all conditions of life lay aside sums destined for particular purposes,—to pay rent, to pay taxes, to pay notes which are yet to mature, to pay all manner of debts that will possibly, may probably or must surely accrue at some future period—except the debt of nature, which money cannot liquidate.

How many faces upon which distress or joy, or other human passions, are depicted, present themselves at the paying and receiving tellers' desks;—how many stories of suffering and woe, starvation, penury, disease, and all the ills that flesh is heir to, are related to Bank officers, and, on the contrary, how many bright pictures of life are brought to their view in the history of those who have been so successful that they are enabled to keep a surplus in Bank. "Surely," said we, as we started upon a pilgrimage after facts and incidents of interest connected with these Savings' Institutions, "this field will yield abundantly." But men view life from different points of observation. Many, after the first look, withdraw their gaze and forget all that they have seen. We talked with innumerable Bank officers. Had not incidents of interest to the reading public come under their observation in the course of the performance of their daily duties? Some thought they had seen and heard of such incidents, but did not remember any just now. Others had been so intent, to take their own words for it, upon business, that they had no time to think of such trivial matters. Some were uncommunicative; others talked of financial matters volubly, but could not be brought to the desired point. At length we came across a jovial and communicative bank secretary. He took us into his back office, comfortably carpeted, conveniently situated, warm as toast. "Take a seat by the fire," said our host. We obeyed implicitly. "A very cold day." We could not but acknowledge it. "Well," said the secretary, after we had related our business, "I don't know. It seems to me I have met with some incidents which,—let me see,—" and the obliging bank officer fell into a brown study which we took good care not to interrupt. We studied in blue. It was a blue day; our success hitherto had been calculated to make us blue. Yet here was hope from our present companion; none of his confreres at the other banks had condescended to fall into a brown study for us. A brown study was certainly something,—or at least it might lead to something. Our friend here interrupted us. "A man came here the other day," said he, "he was dressed in shabby clothes, a laborer, I should think he was. He had $50 in this bank. It had been here ever so long. 'I want to draw that $50 that I've got here,' said he, 'I'm going to buy a lot of ground up in Avenue A, and my friends are going to help me build a house upon it." He spoke in a joyful tone, rubbing his hands, produced his pass-book, and the money was counted out to him. "There," said he, stowing it safely away in his leathern purse, "that whole thing's grown out of 75 cents that I deposited here years ago, when I was a boy," Seventy-five cents had amounted, principal and interest, at six per cent., to $50. "Perhaps," added the Bank Secretary, "that's the kind of incidents you want." We expressed our obligations, said it was exactly, and would thank him for many more of the same sort. Upon this hint he spoke:

"A man came in here one day to deposit $5. After he had made the deposit he talked with me awhile about the rates of interest and the rapidity with which it accumulates, even on small sums. 'Bob,' said he to a friend who accompanied him, as they turned to leave, 'if we'd commenced this a few years ago we should have had a few cool thousands by this time; what fools we were, wern't we, though? Instead of spending money foolishly, dissipating, and'—— By this time they had got outside the door and I could not hear the rest that was said." The Bank officer paused again, and passed his hand caressingly over his bald head three or four times, while we sat breathlessly, with note-book and pencil in hand, ready to record whatever else might fall from his lips. Presently he went on: "One lad, a newsboy, has for some time past deposited 25 cents at a time, sometimes once a week, sometimes oftener, sometimes not so often, but always the same amount, and now he has got $40 in the Bank. Yes, Sir, $40, and it has all accumulated within two years, just from putting these little sums in and letting the interest accumulate upon them. But we have hard work casting the interest on such little sums I can tell you. This twenty-five cent depositor promised his father, when he commenced to deposit, that he would not draw any of it till he was a man, and never has drawn one cent of it—not a red penny. There is one little girl only three years old, a tiny little creature, dressed in miniature furs, muff and all, who comes here periodically and deposits different sums of money. Her father and mother come with her as far as the door, and then she comes in alone, walks up to the desk, lifts up her pass-book, standing upon her toes to reach high enough, and gives the money with it, saying in a little voice just loud enough to be heard, 'Please to keep it safe, Sir.' The last time she came she deposited $5. Some time ago a man brought a check for $100 on a Bank in this City and wanted to deposit it. We made out his pass-book and took the check, and the man departed. A few days after I took it down to the Bank upon which it was drawn, and it wasn't honored. The man had no account there. Well, it troubled me a good deal to have a pass-book out that way and nothing for it, though I knew it couldn't hurt us any because we knew the number of the book, and if the man attempted to draw out money with it he would be in hot water pretty quick. I was afraid that he would pass it away to somebody else for money, and make use of it to impose on some one. Time passed and nothing was heard of the book. We advertised it, but nothing came of it for a long while. At length one day I received a letter from a barber stating that he had a pass-book of this Savings Bank in his possession, and asking me to come to his shop and get it. I went that very day. The barber said a man came in there to be shaved the day before, and this book was found on the chair where he had laid his coat previous to submitting himself to the barber's hands. The book had probably fallen out of his coat-pocket. The description which the barber gave of the man exactly answered that of the one who had obtained the book at the Bank. I was glad to get it into my possession again, and did not make any further inquiries after him." We had some further talk from the polite Secretary, but elicited nothing further on the subject which we were upon. Our further perambulations elicited nothing nearly so well worth relating as the incidents which he had given us.

A Partner-ship Disclaimed.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Dec. 11, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your issue of Monday last, speaking of Mr. ROBERT FINN's claims to the office of Justice of the Superior Court, you state that he does business at No. 61 Wall-street, in "partnership" with me. From this it is believed that he is my partner in business, and inasmuch as his election and subsequent action has created some excitement, and divided public opinion as to his course, I desire that the fact should be known that Mr. FINN was never my partner in business or otherwise. I do not claim any credit, nor do I wish to be censured for anything that may have been done by him since his election. Neither was I aware that he was running for the office, until I saw the official canvass in print.

Respectfully yours, G. O. HULSE.

PAUPERISM.—Rev. GEORGE B. CHEEVER has assented to the request of several gentlemen, that he should repeat next Sunday evening his discourse of last Sunday evening upon "Pauperism, its remedies and preventives." It is an able and timely discourse.

ROBBERY NEAR RIVERHEAD.—Captain DAVID DAVIS, of Orient, L. I., was stopped by three men when on his way from the manor to Riverhead, Thursday morning, who demanded his money. He forked over all that he had—$15. The robbers were unknown, but suspicion rested on three wood-choppers, and the authorities were on their trail to arrest them yesterday.

Horace Greeley on Poetry and Poets.

The lecture room at Clinton Hall was crowded last night, on the occasion of a lecture by Hon. HORACE GREELEY, for the benefit of the Young Men's Philomathean Society. The subject was "Poetry and Poets." Mr. GREELEY commenced by announcing that his lecture would be rambling and desultory. All men, he said, are born poets, not that he meant to imply that every cradle held an undeveloped SHAKESPEARE—far from it. But it was not the less true that young children were poets. The child who thought the stars were gimlet holes to let the glory of heaven through, was a poet. The uncorrupted child instinctively perceives the poetic element in nature. Every close observer must have noticed how naturally the unschooled child comes to talk poetically. EMERSON says the man who first called another a puppy or an ass was a poet, discerning in those animals the likeness of the individual, symbolic of his moral nature. Imagination and the poetic element are ever most fertile in the youth, whether of men or nations, and to this might be ascribed that wild extravagance of our popular stories—of the land being so fertile that if you planted a crowbar over night, in the morning it would be sprouting forth iron spikes and ten-penny nails, or of the pumpkin vine that grew so fast it outran the steed of the astonished traveler. The Englishman was so fenced in by forms, and rules, and conventionalities, that the poetic element was choked out of him. Hence, the English poets were more appreciated in America than in England, and there were more Americans who read Scorr and BYRON, and, he believed, SHAKESPEARE, than there were Englishmen.

The most vulgar error of a vulgar mind, with respect to poetry, was the confounding it with verse, or with even rhyme. Fond mothers would take from some secret drawer the cherished productions of her children, imagining that because they were in rhyme they were therefore poetry, when indeed there was no more poetry in them than in an invitation to pass the baked potatoes. To the fresh, unhackneyed soul, rhyme was as repulsive as a fool's-cap and bells. Many of the best poems were not written metrically. BUNYAN's Pilgrim's Progress was the epic of Methodism, but he wrote hideous doggrel when he attempted verse, as the introduction to that work proved. There can scarcely be a surer proof that a youth has ceased to be a poet than when he begins to rhyme. Yet the poet of our day must be a vassal to the onerous rule. A wild colt of a young bardling will now and then spurn the yoke, as DONALD CLARK did, and WALT WHITMAN is doing; but the latter, though he had received the commendation of one of our greatest poets, would never receive sufficient notice from the critics to be knocked in the head by a volume of the Edinburgh Review.

Of Greek Poetry, Mr. GREELEY said he had no right to say much. The Greek epic held substantially the place of the modern novel. Greek life, as depicted by HOMER, was rude and stern, and not distinguished for its virtues. About the merit of HOMER's poems, it might be imprudent to contradict the verdict of scholars who ranked them so high, but he would secretly cherish his own opinion. Where was the youth, in England or this country, who sought a translation of the Iliad for amusing reading? There were ten copies of the Arabian Nights read for one of Homer. Still, we must be grateful to the epic for originating tragedy. ÆSCHYLUS was the lineal child of HOMER.

Of the Romans, the lecturer said that they were never a poetic people. They had HORACE, an Epicurean, philosophizing in verse; JUVENAL, a biting satirist; VIRGIL, a weaver of legendary lore,—but the compositions of these writers smell of the land, while from the Augustan age to DANTE there was nothing worth reading. One must be as devout a Catholic as DANTE to enjoy his Inferno.

Proceeding to the consideration of English poetry, MR. GREELEY had nothing to say in favor of CHAUCER or SPENSER. Whoever, he asked, sat down to read them otherwise than as a task? For his part, he voted the "Faerie Queen" a bore. Let the gathering dust bury it out of sight.

SHAKESPEARE he did not love, because of his Toryism, but was not insensible to his wonderful genius. His puns were, in the lecturer's opinion, mostly detestable, and his jokes sorry. He was an intense Tory. No autocrat born in the purple had a more thorough contempt for the rabble. With SHAKESPEARE only the court cards counted. His world was bounded by the fogs of London, and the palace of Whitehall. He must have heard RALEIGH and DRAKE, and other adventurous spirits, who had visited America, talk of the New World, and yet he never referred to any portion of it, except in that inaccurate allusion "the still-vexed Bermoothes." He was no friend of the people. He saw in the million only the counters wherewith Kings and Nobles played their games, and he did not recognize the possibility of their becoming anything else. Mr. GREELEY would not say which was the greater poet, but he would say that MILTON was the better man. There was not a single passage in SHAKESPEARE which did his manhood such honor as MILTON's two sonnets on his blindness.

Of the English poets, after MILTON and prior to the present century, POPE alone was deserving of mention. Not that he was a poet at all, but a very respectable philosopher. Of GOLDSMITH, THOMSON, GRAY, YOUNG, COWPER, it might be said that they were not poets but essayists and sermonizers. They have produced nothing which mankind could not well spare. Let them quietly sink into oblivion.

Mr. GREELEY gave BURNS he praise of having written true poetry, after the age had been satiated with a heap of mediocre or worthless verse. In his poems might be found the fitting answer of the dumb millions to the taunts and slurs of SHAKESPEARE.

Of the present poetical era, KEATS was the morning star. BYRON held the highest place among modern poets, though the influence of much that he had written was bad. As GOETHE could not have modeled his "Mephistopheles" on BYRON's life, it had been said that BYRON must have modeled his life on GOETHE's "Mephistopheles." BYRON's life has never yet been properly written, and it would indeed be a difficult task to write a life of him that would suit the Sunday Schools.

COLERIDGE, ROGERS, SOUTHEY, CAMPBELL—with the exception of one or two little poems of each—literature, the lecturer thought, could spare them all. WORDSWORTH was a remarkable instance of tenacity. He began his poetical life with a theory, and, though possessed of no remarkable powers, he persisted in his theory, and finally conquered his critics. The credit of that theory, however, was not so much due to WORDSWORTH as to MRS. HEMANS, whose poetry Mr. GREELEY greatly praised.

Of HOOD he spoke in high terms. TENNYSON he lauded warmly, instancing the "In Memoriam," "The Princess" and "Maud," as foremost among the gems of English literature.

Of ROBERT BROWNING, he said the reading public knows too little. Even in England he startled some of his judicious friends by saying that he was not inferior to TENNYSON. He especially indicated the "Blot in the Scutcheon," "Pippa Passes," and "Paracelsus" as among the best poems of the century. ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING, the wife of ROBERT, received due praise from Mr. GREELEY, especially for her poem of "Aurora Leigh."

Mr. GREELEY, in concluding his lecture, remarked that on a future occasion, he would deliver a lecture on the Poetry and Poets of America.

Obituary.

The Charleston Mercury has the following notice of the late Com. GEDNEY: He distinguished himself by his successful labors in the Coast Survey, and has been identified with the great undertaking by the discovery of the channel into New-York Harbor which bears his name. For this important service he received a valuable testimonial from the merchants of New-York. His last tour of active service was in the Chinese seas, where he had command of a sloop-of-war. Since his return, severe physical suffering incapacitated him from active service, and he returned to his native city to die among his kindred.

A telegraphic dispatch has been received at the War Department announcing the death of Colonel WILLIAM TURNBULL, of the Corps of Topographical Engineers. He was chief of his corps under General SCOTT in Mexico in 1848, and was twice brevetted for gallant and meritorious conduct, first in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco, and secondly in the battle of Chapultepec. Colonel T. was a graduate of West Point, and at the time of his decease had been in the military service forty years. He had suffered much from impaired health during the last year.

The late M. ABBATUCCI, Minister of Justice in France, was a native of Corsica. He entered the French Magistracy in 1816, and held various grades of office for thirty-three years. He was elected to the Chamber of Deputies in 1839. In 1849 he vacated his seat in the Court of Cassation to defend in the Legislative Assembly the cause of order. Shortly after, the Emperor rewarded a constant fidelity by confiding to him the office of Minister of Justice.

Hon. John Fleming, the distinguished Scotch Professor of Natural Science, died recently. He has long held a place in the first rank of British naturalists. His History of British Animals and Philosophies of Zoology, though written thirty years ago, are still standard books.

Hon. Asa W. Wilkes, long known in Essex County, Mass., as County Commissioner, died at his residence in Newburyport on Friday, at the age of 71.

A GRATIFYING RESULT.—It will be seen by the official announcement which we publish to-day that the nomination of General DENVER as Secretary of Kansas Territory, in place of FREDERICK P. STANTON, removed, has been confirmed by the Senate. This prompt action of the Senate in response to the policy of the Administration on the subject of Kansas will be hailed with satisfaction by the country.—Washington Union.

MISSISSIPPI STATE TREASURY SUSPENDED.—The Vicksburg Whig makes the following extract from a letter from Jackson, 26th ult:

"I saw a warrant on the State Treasury, to-day, endorsed 'No money in the Treasury, Nov. 25, 1857.' So we go; banks and State alike."

Resumption of Specie Payments.

A meeting of bank officers was held at the Clearing-House on Friday afternoon, at which the following banks were represented:

Bank of State of N. Y.,	Marine Bank,
American Ex. Bank,	Atlantic Bank,
Broadway Bank,	Imp. and Traders' Bank,
Ocean Bank,	Park Bank,
Mercantile Bank.	Artisans' Bank.

On motion, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That on and after to-morrow we will resume specie payments in full on all our liabilities.

On motion, it was ordered that the proceedings of the meeting be published in the morning papers.

WM. A. BOOTH, Chairman.

R. S. OAKLEY, Secretary.

The following Banks were not represented at the meeting, but are said to be in favor of the step taken:

Manhattan Co.,	Bank of Commerce,
Chemical Bank,	Pacific Bank,
National Bank,	Bank of North America,
Greenwich Bank,	Nassau Bank.

The Board of County Canvassers.

The Board of County Canvassers reassembled at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, Alderman HARRIS in the Chair.

The Seventh Ward returns were taken up.

Vote for Mayor—Wood, 2,322; Tiemann, 2,250.

Vote for Almshouse Commissioner—Dugro, 2,147; Smith, 1,293; Wagner, 908.

The Seventh Ward (part of the Fourth Aldermanic District) gives Stevens 1,083; Lindsay, 1,356.

The Seventh Ward (part of the Eighth Aldermanic District) gives Adams 999; McConnell, 465; Walker, 230; Floyd, 178; Falconer, 6; Scattering, 22.

The Second District return of the Seventh Ward for Councilmen, was ordered to be sent back for the correction of a clerical error.

The Second District return of the Eighteenth Ward for Supervisors; the Ninth District return for Civil Justice, and the Tenth District return for Inspector of Common Schools, were corrected. The Eighteenth Ward returns were then accepted as complete.

Alderman WILSON handed in the return of the Second District of the First Ward for School Officers, saying that he had been unable to find the Canvassers to correct his return. He moved that the original return be accepted as correct. Carried.

A resolution was adopted that the returns of the several Wards be published in the Daily News, the Journal of Commerce, the Express, the Sunday Times, the Sunday Atlas, and Staats Zeitung.

Alderman FULLMER presented a petition from the Canvassers of the Fourth District of the Third Ward, asking that twenty more votes in that district be allowed for Lothrop and twenty more for Welsh for Police Justice. The petition was granted.

The returns of all the Wards were then announced as having been read, but that the corrections ordered to be made in the Second District of the Twelfth Ward; in the First and Ninth Districts of the Seventeenth Ward; in the First and Fourth Dirtricts of the Twenty-second Ward and the Second District of the Seventh Ward had not yet been sent in.

The Board then took a recess until 3 o'clock.

Personal.

Twenty-four years ago, (November, 1833,) one John Ingle died in Cambridge, England, leaving a large family. Ingle was a careless man, and left his papers in disorder. Two months ago, his oldest son discovered among a mass of old documents £2,000 worth of scrip in the Three Per Cents., which had lain hidden there many years. On application at the proper quarter, he discovered that the interest accruing in the interval had mounted up to the respectable figure of £1,500. He established his claim, and the family now comes into possession of the snug sum of £3,500—or $17,500.

Under the head of "a very salutary sentence," an English paper records the sentence of fourteen days imprisonment upon an unhappy Italian whose only offence was the grinding of a hand-organ in the street, to the annoyance of one Mr. George Lording, who sued for the abatement of the nuisance. There are several hundreds of these itinerant musicians in New-York who don't fall upon such evil times.

The shoe-blacks of London are formed into a regular brigade, under suitable supervision. The third annual report, just published, states that the earnings of forty boys for the past year have amounted to $2 880. Of this sum, $1,815 was paid for their maintenance, and the balance is placed to their credit in the savings bank. Perhaps a similar organization would work well in New-York.

The Boston Transcript contradicts the current report that Rev. Dr. Chapin proposes to devote to the poor the entire receipts of his lecturing tour this Winter. The mistake originated in the fact that the proceeds of a single lecture were so set apart.

Professor Francis Bowen, of Harvard University, is to give a course of twelve lectures before the Lowell Institute, in Boston, on "The Principal English Philosophers and Metaphysicians, from Bacon to Sir William Hamilton."

Lieut. E. P. Hunt, of the United States Engineer Corps, has been ordered to the command of Fort Taylor, Fla. The present officer in charge, Captain D. P. Woodbury, retains command of Fort Jefferson.

The Boston Transcript states that Mr. George W. Curtis is engaged to appear before literary societies in Massachusetts almost every evening for some time.

Resolutions complimentary to Lieut Maury and recommendatory of his restoration to active naval service, have been passed by the Legislature of Alabama.

Rev. John Pierpont, now 72 years of age, was married last week to his third wife, Mrs. Fowler, of Campbellville, N. Y.

Mr. Sandidge, M. C., from Louisiana, was not on board the lost steamer Rainbow.

The late Samuel Sheafe, of Portsmouth, N. H., left legacies of $5,400 for benevolent objects.

Escape of Negroes—Bloodhounds on the Track.

From the Jefferson (Miss.) Journal, Nov. 27.

On Monday night last, while the jailor, Mr. ROBERT HAINES, was waiting upon Mr. WM. SMILIE, with his supper, two negroes, escaping from their room, ran down the hall, and before Mr. HAINES had time to arrest them, escaped at the door, and took their way across the fields toward Port Gibson. Alarm was immediately made, and mounted horsemen scoured the respective roads from Fayette to Rodney, to Natchez and Port Gibson, while a pack of hounds were also despatched for, and about three hours after the escape of the negroes, were howling and running on their trail. The negroes held their distance with remarkable energy and endurance, and were not overtaken until after a race of about twenty-five miles, when they were caught near the residence of Dr. MAGRUDER, about two miles East of Port Gibson. They left Fayette about 7 o'clock on Monday night, and about 3 o'clock on Tuesday they were returned to jail, rejoicing for a spot whereon to lie down, even be it the naked floor of a cell. The strongest and most desperate of the two excused himself on the pretence that he couldn't resist the temptation to run away; and the other dashed out after him, to catch him, and bring him back.

Gov. Stewart, of Missouri, has appointed Thursday, the 31st of this month, a day of Thanksgiving.

WISCONSIN.—The official returns of the State Election in Wisconsin are at last all in, except La Pointe County, which is reported to have given 40 Democratic majority. The question of the choice of Governor is therefore settled. J. B. CROSS, Democrat, is elected by 262 majority over RANDALL. Nearly 100,000 votes were cast.

Vacant houses in Newark, N. J., are becoming plentier about the city, and rents are gradually falling. Many landlords have reduced their rents one-third.

Mrs. Place, of Hannibal, Oswego County, N. Y., met her death last week by the explosion of a camphene lamp.

S. C. HERRING & CO.'S PATENT CHAMPION SAFES.—The subscribers, grateful for past favors, and finding that a discriminating public were bestowing their patronage to that extent that more warerooms were necessary to exhibit all their stock, have enlarged their depot, by opening an extensive ware and salesroom on Broadway, at No. 251, corner of Murray-st., opposite the City Hall. This enlargement of warehouse room, with the recent extensive enlargement of their factory, will enable the subscribers to keep on hand at all times a larger stock of fire and burglar-proof safes than any other establishment in the world. Particular attention will be had to constructing safes for private families to match with other furniture, for the security of plate and jewelry, (and housekeepers are invited to call and examine for themselves.) Also, will keep on hand and make to order, all kinds of money chests, vault doors and bank vaults, Hall's patent powder-proof locks for banks or store doors, Jones' patent permutation bank lock, and Crygier's patent letter lock, without key.

Mr. LANSING BONNELL, Milwaukee,
Agent for Herring & Co.'s Patent Safes:
DEAR SIR: The Herring Champion Safe that I purchased of you, was in my store at the time it was burned last March. The heat was so great that it melted off the brass plates and knob on the front of the safe. The door was warped so badly from the heat that I was obliged to cut it open. But I am happy to say to you, the contents of the safe were preserved to my perfect satisfaction.

WING'S CELEBRATED FARINA CRACKERS,
Made from material prepared from that portion of the Wheat which is most NUTRITIOUS and HEALTHFUL.
It is estimated that ONE POUND CONTAINS AS MUCH NUTRIMENT AS TWO POUNDS OF BREAD, as it is usually baked.
WING'S FARINA CRACKERS
are of small size, over ninety to the pound, and baked dry.
They are delightful to the taste, and one of the best Crackers ever produced for FAMILY USE.
FOR LUNCH,
and with Oysters, they are unequaled.
We ask every mother to procure WING'S FARINA CRACKERS for her children. They are far superior to many of the preparations usually given to them, being decidedly more healthful and nourishing, and, as they dissolve readily in the mouth, are always eaten with a fine zest.
Ladies and gentlemen will find them unsurpassable for their
FINE FLAVOR AND PLEASANT TASTE.
Delicate ladies, and all persons whose habits are more or less sedentary, will find WING'S CRACKERS most excellent.
For Professional Gentlemen, Bankers, Merchants and Clerks, they may be used for LUNCH with great advantage in maintaining a healthful regularity of the system.
Teachers and Scholars, in schools generally, will find them very agreeable.
WING'S FARINA CRACKERS are a most valuable article for Travelers in the cars; or on shipboard, at sea, they are one of the very best things that can be eaten.
The use of them is becoming widely extended, and, in order to guard against deception,
EACH CRACKER IS STAMPED WITH THE NAME OF "WING."
There are no other Crackers manufactured in the United States like these, or known as true Farina Crackers.
WING'S FARINA CRACKERS are sold by most of the best Grocers in New-York, Brooklyn, Jersey City and also in many of the larger cities and towns throughout the different States.
They may be had at wholesale only of
A. N. THOMPSON & CO.,
Nos. 221 and 223 Fulton-st., New-York.

MORE HOME TESTIMONY.—BOSTON, April 18, 1852. No. 48 Union-st.—Mr. SETH W. FOWLE Dear Sir: Your invaluable medicine, I can truly say, has literally snatched me from the grave. Last July I was attacked by a sudden cold, which resulted in a very severe cough, with violent pains in the side and chest. I became so much reduced that my friends frankly told me that I must die. At this crisis I heard of WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY, and immediately sent for a bottle. The effect produced was indeed wonderful. My physician, one of the most respectable in Boston, who had previously told me that a cure was hopeless, came in, and I informed him what I had taken. He advised me to continue the use of it, since which time I have continued to improve daily; and he told me, a few days since, that I might yet live many years.
Respectfully, MARY ROWE.
We can cheerfully testify to the truth of the above statement, Mrs. Rowe having been an inmate of our family.
WILLIAM DENNETT,
MARTHA DENNETT.
None genuine unless signed I. BUTTS on the wrapper.

RHEUMATISM, SCROFULA, &c.—HYATT'S Life Balsam is the most certain remedy for these terrible diseases. You who are suffering the most torturing pains, remember that a few doses of this powerful, yet pleasant compound, will afford certain relief. Thousands of cases have been cured and published in the Times and other papers. These certificates are from well-known citizens who can be seen and consulted at any hour. Circulars containing these certificates can be had at the principal depot, No. 246 Grand-st. Seventy-five cents per bottle.

COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, &c.—HYATT'S Pulmonic Balsam is daily curing the worst cases of these complaints. It cured Mr. J. H. Godwin of pain in the side, breast, and spitting of blood, after he had been afflicted for years, and was reduced to the last stages of weakness, and considered beyond the reach of medicine. Mr. Godwin's office is at No. 114 Elizabeth-st. He is now in the enjoyment of perfect health. Let the afflicted call and see him. Depot, No. 246 Grand-st. 75 cents per bottle.

The Texas Recruits for Walker.

From the Galveston News.

The Walker Expedition is progressing. Seven hundred men have already been mustered in Texas. They have been gathered in companies under the following commanders: Houston, Captain Hal. Runnels, 100; Austin, Captain McEschern, 70; Brazoria, Captain Phelps, 40; Powder Horn, Captain Henry, 75; San Antonio River, Captains Perry and Stribbling, 100; Unknown, Captain Mosely, supposed 50; Captain McIlhenny, 75; Captain Moore, 30; Captain Keys, 30.

Most of these will soon leave for Nicaragua, and the rest will follow with but little delay. Of course nothing has yet been heard from General WALKER since he left. Colonel WATKINS is in Houston, and will leave with the first emigrants to join WALKER. It is well known that WALKER is now receiving the active cooperation of many of the most influential men in the South, and though the movement has been delayed by the recent financial embarrassment of the country, yet everything is now progressing most favorably. Colonel ROGERS is in New-Orleans, acting as General WALKER's principal agent there.

The total value of property in Texas, as returned is $173,504,205. Estimating the white population at 500,000 souls, this would give $367 to every man, woman and child in the State, and upwards of $3,000 to each voter.

A correspondence urging the necessity of watertight compartments in sea-going vessels, appears in the Mobile papers. Lieutenant Maury indorses the utility of the plan.

The Leavenworth (Kansas) Journal has changed hands and become Democratic, taking ground against the Lecompton Constitution.

The location of the proposed Southern University has been fixed at Sewanee, Tenn.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

TO-NIGHT, (Saturday,) Dec. 12

The entirely new drama, in five acts and seven tableaux, will be produced,

THE POOR OF NEW YORK,
Written by the * * * * * Club.

This work commences with a prologue, representing a scene in
THE PANIC OF 1837.

Out of the events engendered at the period arise the incidents which compose a drama of deep interest, in which are depicted
SCENES OF NEW YORK LIFE
during the terrible crisis through which we are now passing.
SKETCHES OF CHARACTER,
LOCAL SCENERY,
SUBJECTS OF PASSING INTEREST,
all contribute to render this work an exciting and speaking picture of
NEW-YORK AS IT IS.

CHAUNCEY SMITH.

KNAPP'S PREMIUM PATENT LAMP.
THIS IS THE CHEAPEST
AND ONE OF THE SAFEST LAMPS IN THE WORLD,
THE OILS USED IN IT ARE NON-EXPLOSIVE.

The lamp received a medal at the late Fair in this City, as will be seen by the annexed report of the Premium Committee, as being the most perfect lamp for burning the cheap hydro-carbon oils. It gives the most diffusive steady and mellow light extant. Many who for years had discontinued reading and working by artificial light experience no difficulty in using this. It is the cheapest and most brilliant light of the age. The flame can be so graduated as to cost but one-third of a cent per hour; or if required, it will produce a light equal, at least to ten candles or six two-tube fluid burners, and at a cost of but one cent per hour.

The cheapness of the light being a fixed fact, it particularly recommends itself to hard times, and speaks in glowing words to the prudent and economical. These oils being non-explosive, this lamp is of all others best adapted for family and ship's use.

Old lamps can be altered to fit these burners, thus making what are now worthless both useful and ornamental.

Chandeliers, hanging and side-lamps with reflectors; also every variety of pattern and price for table use, at wholesale and retail, by the undersigned.

CENTURY LIGHT.

The following extract from the report of the Judges on Lamps, Chandeliers, &c. at the twenty-ninth Annual Fair of the American Institute at the Crystal Palace, Nov., 1857, justifies the appellation of the Century Light.

No. 1396, 2941 are one and the same lamp. In the year 1677, Dr. Hook made some observations on the construction of flame so important that the wonder is that he should not have discovered the principle introduced by Argand in 1784. Up to this time every wick consisted of a solid cone, the flame from which was supplied by air upon its outside.

The Argand has air supplied both upon the inside and outside, the wick being concentric.

This Argand principle added to the first cost of all lamps seriously, notwithstanding the Argand is the lamp of the world, producing perfect combustion, steady, efficient and durable light. A. H. KNAPP, the inventor of lamp 1396 and 2941, has most ingeniously given us, after a lapse of seventy years, a cheap Argand lamp, without in any wise interfering with the durability and certainty of the great Argand burner, thus placing within reach of all burning oils the lamp to suit the times, at the same time giving a more cleanly lamp than that of so long standing.

A silver medal was awarded William Spooner for Knapp's Patent Lamp for burning the hydro-carbon oils.

Signed JOHN W. CHAMBERS, Sec. Prem. Com.

TESTIMONIALS

Numerous testimonials, similar to the following, are being constantly received:

FROM EX-GOVERNOR BRIGGS.

I have used Knapp's Patent Lamp for five evenings. It is said that three gills of the oil will burn fifteen hours, and from the experiments I have made I think it will. There is no unpleasant odor from it, and it gives a brilliant and beautiful light, very soft and agreeable to the eye.

From what I have used it, I think, all things considered, it is the most beautiful and agreeable light I have ever used. GEO. N. BRIGGS.

PITTSFIELD, Sept. 14, 1857.

FROM M LYON, ESQ., DISTRICT-ATTORNEY.

I have tried Knapp's Patent Lamp, and give it my unqualified approbation, for the steady and brilliant light afforded by it. The lamp, when burning the oil at the rate of a gill in about three hours, gives a light equal to six or eight burning-fluid burners; at least I came to that conclusion after making the experiment. The light is peculiar on account of its diffusiveness: it illuminates the whole room better than any other lamp with which I am acquainted. MARCUS LYON.

ITHACA, Nov. 6, 1857.

FROM REV. T. DWIGHT HUNT, PASTOR OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

I cheerfully certify to the value of Knapp's Patent Lamp. It burns steadily and brilliantly. Its light is equal to that of a gas burner, and far superior to that of the fluid lamps in ordinary use. I should judge, also, that it was much more economical than either.

ITHACA, Nov. 6, 1857 T. DWIGHT HUNT.

WE PUBLISH, TO-DAY:

PARTON'S LIFE OF BURR.
LIFE AND TIMES OF AARON BURR.
BY J. PARTON.

One volume, 700 pages, crown octavo. Illustrated by engravings on steel and wood.
Price $1 75.

"Parton's Life of Burr" is in every respect an original and peculiar work, of absorbing interest, and possessing claims to the attention of Americans. The author claims that in this volume "The story of Aaron Burr's strange eventful life is told for the first time, and is derived in great part from the personal reminiscences of his surviving friends, connections and acquaintances."

The peculiar romantic and eventful life of Aaron Burr has afforded material for one of the most interesting and fascinating biographies ever written, while incidentally to the subject the rise and progress to power of the great Democratic Party of the United States is fully recorded.

The volume is printed on superfine paper, and illustrated with portraits, on steel, of Burr and his daughter Theodosia, and several wood engravings.

Price $1 75.

The Gold Medal Premium has this year been awarded to the Pianos of SCHUETZE & LUDOLFF, No. 452 Broome-st., New-York, over those sent from Boston, Albany and Troy, as well as many others from this City. For strength and sweetness combined, the pianos of these gentlemen have never been surpassed. They are full, soft and rich, yet forcible, and easy to the touch. In external appearance, too, they are second to none, being highly finished, and elegant in form. In short, they are thoroughly excellent, and the publichas already seconded the decision of the judges.
SCHUETZE & LUDOLFF, No. 452 Broome st.

STEINWAY & SONS, MANUFACTURERS—No. 84 Walker-st., near Broadway, have again been awarded the first premium—a gold medal—for the best grand pianos, at the Maryland Institute, Baltimore; and while they thus endeavor to manufacture a piano-forte that will always be No. 1 wherever it goes, they will sell them at reduced prices to suit the times. A written warrantee given for three years.

A CHOICE STOCK OF PIANOS AND MELODEONS AT VERY LOW RATES.—Agency of Jacob Chickering's celebrated Boston Pianos, S. D. & H. W. Smith's Prize Melodeons and Improved New York Pianos. These steamers, built expressly for Government service, with double engines under deck; every care has been taken in the construction of hull and machinery to insure safety and speed. The ships have five water-tight compartments, inclosing the engines, so that in the event of collision or stranding, the water could not reach them, and the pumps being free to work, the safety of the vessel and passengers would be secured. Recent experience has demonstrated the absolute necessity of this mode of construction. The accommodations for passengers are believed to combine every comfort and convenience that can be desired.

NEW-YORK CITY.

BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

The Crystal Palace to be Taken Down—The Conduct of the Central Park Commissioners to be Investigated.

The Board met last evening, President CLANCY in the Chair. On motion of Alderman [illegible] a resolution to purchase $3,000 worth of [illegible] the Third Avenue road and others in the northernly section, and take the money from next year's appropriation, was called up. Alderman TUCKER said the right such an appropriation would be a violation of the Charter; if not, the Board might go on and use up the entire appropriation for next year before the end of the month. Alderman JACKSON claimed that the course recommended by him was legal, and would save the City thousands of dollars. In response to a request from Alderman TUCKER that he would quote a precedent for such action, he named the time when the Kingsbridge-road was macadamized before, at which time Alderman TUCKER had voted for the appropriation. Alderman TUCKER still held that under the new Charter the appropriation could not be made. Alderman BLUNT thought the stone could not be purchased without advertising; that was his understanding of the Charter. Alderman JACKSON said the Charter was the same now as it was thirty years ago in that respect. It was not likely that any one man would receive more than $20 of the $3,000.

The vote was then taken, and the resolution was adopted by a vote of 15 to 3.

The following was presented by Alderman MONEHAN and adopted:

Whereas, It is alleged that James Hogg, one of the Central Park Commissioners, has used his official position and attempted to exercise an undue influence with those employed and also those who sought employment upon the Central Park, in regard to their votes at the recent elections.

Resolved, That the matter be referred to the Committee on Lands and Places; to investigate, and that they have power to send for persons and papers on said matter.

The following resolutions were offered and adopted:

Resolved that the Comptroler Be & is Hearby Directed to Draw his Warrent in favor William D Kinchbaun for the sum of twenty Dollars and Eighty Seven cents for Hireing of his Premises corner of Ninth Av. and twenty furth st. 4 Election Pole for the year 1856 and charge the same to the Propper Account

Resolved that the Comptroler Be and is Hear By Directed to Draw his Warrant in favor of Robard Curren of four Dollars fifty Cents and charge the same to the Appropiate Account.

The report in favor of granting the Receiver of the Crystal Palace time to the 1st of May, 1858, to remove the building, and directing its removal within that time, was called up, when, after some debate, Alderman WILSON moved the previous question, which was lost.

Alderman FULLMER believed the Palace now belonged to the City.

Alderman TUCKER said, if the building were taken by the City, it would require the continuous labor of forty glaziers to keep the glass in.

After further debate the report was accepted and the resolution adopted, by a vote of 17 to 6.

The Board then adjourned.

Committee on Foundling Hospital.

An adjourned meeting of the Committee on the proposed Foundling Hospital, was held in the Library of the City Hall on Friday, Councilman HASWELL in the chair.

Dr. JAMES WYNNE addressed the Committee from a written paper. He commenced by observing that France, Belgium, Italy, Spain and Portugal, Austria and Russia had adopted the system of Sr. VINCENT DE PAUL as contrasted with that of HERMANN FRANKE, and England, Holland, Sweden and Denmark, Prussia and Switzerland, a considerable part of Germany, and the United States, that of HERMANN FRANKE. In examining this question, the fact must not be lost sight of, that the difference in fundamental principles was not so diverse as at first sight might be supposed. In each the necessity of some provision is recognized.

This, then, was not a question of theory, but one of actual existence, so deeply interwoven in the organization of human society as to present itself in all conditions, from the most barbarous to that in which civilization has attained its highest development.

The most ancient hospital for enfans trouvés, or foundlings, of which history makes mention, is that established in Milan, A. D. 787, by DALTIUS, of which an account is given by MURATORI, in his learned Antiquities of Mediæval Italy. OLIVIER DE LA FROU, in 1070, established at Montpeller a hospital under the care of the Hospitallers of the Holy Spirit, its duties being to receive foundlings and to nourish abandoned orphans.

In 1210, the foundling hospital of the Knights of the Holy Spirit was established at Jerusalem by the decree of Pope INNOCENT III. A similar institution was founded in Venice in 1380, and in Florence about 1421.

There is a magnificent hospital for foundlings in Rome. It occupies a fine position between the Vatican and the Tiber, and was built by the Saxons in 717. There is connected with the house a turning box, in which the infant is placed, the turning of which strikes a bell and announces to the inmates the arrival of the new object of their sympathies. From the year 1198 to the present time the institution has been carefully attended.

The Ospizia della SS. Munziata at Naples, which claims to be the earliest establishment for foundlings in Europe, was established by SANCIA, wife of ROBERT of Provence, one of the wisest and best of the Sicilian monarchs. There are usually about 800 foundlings supported and educated there.

According to the Documens Statistiques sur la France, published by the Minister of Commerce, the number of cases of infanticide between 1826 and 1835 inclusive, amounted to 984, or 98 each year, being one case to each 328,530 inhabitants. From the report presented to the National Assembly upon the suppression of the "Tours" in April 1850, it appears that from 1830 to 1838 the cases of infanticide numbered about 104 each year. But from 1835, when the "Tours" were closed, to 1840, they rose to 134, from 1840 to 1845 to 147, and in 1847 they reached 174; while the criminal statistics showed a decided decrease in other crimes from 1835 to 1846. As for indirect infanticide, before birth, the number had doubled, and in some cases had increased five-fold. These observations would appear to indicate a direct connection between infanticide and the withdrawal of facilities formerly provided by the French Government for the sustentation of such illicit offspring.

The Doctor next proceeded to sketch the history of the formation of the Foundling Hospital in Paris by ST. VINCENT DE PAUL, in 1640. He described it as the most extensive and useful establishments of the kind in existence. Prior to 1835, it was customary to place the foundling in a turning-box, as in Italy; but after that period, it became necessary to obtain the certificate of abandonment from a commissary of police, who was charged by the Government to offer every inducement to parties leaving children not to abandon them, but, at the same time made it his duty never to withhold the required certificate, if the person soliciting it was not moved by his representations to abandon the purpose of parting with the infant. There are 600 beds in this Hospital, and the number received annually, and either kept in the Hospital or sent into the country, are not far from four thousand.

The Doctor remarked that ADDISON, in one of his papers in the Guardian, referred to this species of charity. The suggestion was taken up by THOMAS CORAM, and with him originated the Foundling Hospital of London. The history of this institution was next given. The Doctor remarked that it had exerted a large influence upon society during a century. The description of the building, its altar-piece, its organ which was the gift of HANDEL, and the paintings the gift of WEST and others, were mentioned. Here HANDEL conducted his Messiah for many years, realizing much for the funds of the institution. About 400 children are provided for annually. At a proper age they are apprenticed.

Two important questions arise: First, the effect which foundling hospitals exercise over legitimacy; and, secondly, their influence upon infanticide. The Doctor presented a tabular statement, (illustrative of his views,) in which are given the relative numbers of legitimate and illegitimate births in many countries of Europe.

States.	Legitimate births.	Illegitimate births.	Total.	Proportion of 100 child'n born Legit.	Illegit.
Sardinia	427,019	30,474	457,493	97.90	2.09
Sweden	445,501	31,289	476,799	93.43	6.56
Norway	169,252	12,111	181,363	93.32	6.67
England	482,943	34,796	517,739	93.27	6.72
Belgium	126,781	9,354	136,135	93.22	6.77
France	912,988	69,938	982,896	92.85	7.11
Prussia	549,376	42,129	591,055	92.87	7.12
Denmark	58,356	6,920	64,376	90.64	9 35
Hanover	50,072	5,487	55,559	90.12	9.87
Austria	729,890	101,821	894,711	88.62	11.38
Wurtenburg	66,597	8,859	75,456	88.26	11.74
Saxony	59,582	10,512	70,094	85.00	14.99
Bavaria	118,456	30,729	149,185	79.40	20 59

This table clearly establishes that the causes of illegitimacy lie beyond the influence of the Foundling Hospitals, and are in no way affected by the existence or absence of those establishments.

If any argument can be adduced from such returns as bearing upon Foundling Hospitals, it is that their presence rather tends to decrease illegitimacy. Thus in Italy, where Foundling Hospitals have their fullest development, the number of illegitimate births is far less than in Sweden, Norway, or many of the Northern kingdoms of Europe, where their aid is proscribed. The Doctor said he would adopt any conclusions cautiously which might be drawn from such tabulated statement. This great evil of social life is fostered and nourished also by other circumstances, which lie beyond the province of the Committee to investigate.

No statistics exist by which any comparison in this respect can be instituted between the United States and the different countries of Europe. The Doctor was inclined to believe there was less illegitimacy here, in the rural districts, than in Northern Europe, not because Americans are more virtuous, but because with us a livelihood is more easily secured and maintained by the laboring classes. The preponderance of marriages and births in the new States over the old goes far to support that view.

Infanticide might be expected to be a crime of rare occurrence. Our knowledge of the habits of the more polished nations of antiquity proves how easy custom and association can destroy the natural instinct. Lycurgus legitimatized the abandonment of infants and the practice has always been common in India. Solon, three centuries after Lycurgus, established the legal right of parents taking the lives of their children. Infanticide was common in Greece, and excited neither horror nor astonishment.

With the advent of the Christian era this crime came to be regarded in its full enormity, and, doubtless, inspired the idea of a Foundling Hospital.

The statistics of infanticide are somewhat contradictory. In Ireland, where the system in Dublin and other large towns was the same as in France, the number of infanticides from 1826 to 1832 was 175, or 25 per year, being 1 to 300,000 inhabitants. While in England, where the German system was in existence, there occurred in twenty-four years, from 1810 to 1833, 339 cases, or rather more than 14 each year, which was 1 to each 856,581 inhabitants. In Ireland there was scarcely any secured provisions for the poor, while in England the parish relief and workhouses have been and are available. In five provinces of Belgium, in which foundling hospitals existed, the proportion of infanticides for ten years was annually one in 109,942. While in four provinces, where no such institution existed, the ratio was as 1 to 136,662.

The Doctor then called attention to the New-York City Inspector's report for 1850, to show the ratio between the whole population and the premature and stillborn births, in periods of five years.

In 1805 the ratio to the population was as....1 to 1,612
In 1820 the ratio to the population was as....1 to 654
In 1830 the ratio to the population was as....1 to 569
In 1850 the ratio to the population was as....1 to 386

These records do not furnish any means of determining the absolute number of births occurring between such periods in this City. But, fortunately, the statistics of births in other countries enable us to determine the number in conformity with a general law. The number living to each one born, in France, is 35, in England 31, Prussia 27, Austria 26, Russia 23. According to the census of 1850, one in 35.

The annexed table, formed upon such a basis will show the population, births, still-born, and proportion of still-born to the number of births in New-York in each year:

Year.	Population.	Births.	Stillborn.	Births for one Stillborn
1805	75,770	2,526	51	49
1810	93,373	3,112	94	33
1815	100,619	3,353	102	32
1820	122,706	4,123	189	22
1825	166,086	5,536	244	22
1830	202,589	6,752	339	20
1835	270,089	9,002	474	19
1840	312,710	10,423	656	16
1845	372,223	12,374	965	13
1850	515,394	17,180	1,335	12

The Doctor then submitted an abstract from M. QUETELET's table, showing the relative number of still-born to the whole number of births in several of the chief European cities. In Hamburg 15 for 1 stillborn, in Amsterdam 17, in Dresden 17, in Paris 19, Berlin 20, Vienna 24, London 27, Brunswick 33, and Stockholm 36, the mean average being 1 for every 22, or about the number in New-York in 1825, when the population was 166,086.

Among 111,920 births in town and country, collected under the registration law of Massachusetts in five years, there occurred 2,050 cases of still-born, or 1 in each 53. Among 11,139 registered in Connecticut in 1856 there were 167 still-born, or 1 in each 66 births. Kentucky enumerates 1 to each 45 births, and Rhode Island so many as 1 in 15.

The difference among these returns is so great as to excite lively apprehensions as to the causes of it, causes which operating upon New-York produce undoubtedly the remarkable results developed by the bill of mortality of this city.

The great variations existing between the returns from Massachusetts and Connecticut on the one side, and Rhode Island on the other, would lead us to cast the latter returns aside as unworthy of credit, were it not that the greater part of the births and still-born cases are returned from the city of PROVIDENCE, being no less than 1,675 of the former and 112 of the latter, or one to each 15.

The general assumption of the Doctor was, that as the returns from Providence were accurate, (whatever might be the character of such returns from other parts of the State,) such returns from the city were trustworthy, and therefore would form a sound basis for any reasoning upon still-born cases in any of the large cities of the Union. He defended medical practitioners from any supposed complicity in swelling the number of still-born cases. The ratio of such is evidently and everywhere more numerous in town than in country.

Now, though it is true that the number of still-born is proportionally less in the rural districts of this country than in Europe, yet the disparity is so great between QUETELET's observations and the returns of the States of Massachusetts, Connecticut and Kentucky as to lead to the conclusion already expressed, that the number has not been accurately returned from the country districts; but, whatever be the amount of error, it will be seen that, with ample correction, they stand far in advance of this City. Whether these results, which give to New-York such an unenviable reputation, are consequent upon extreme recklessness and mismanagement, or are the evidences of a long and dark catalogue of undiscovered crime, it was neither the Doctor's province nor duty to determine.

With these remarks Dr. WYNNE concluded what he had to say. The foregoing is only an abridgement of an elaborate paper. No other person being present to address the Committee, the Chairman expressed his regret at the absence of Dr. JAMES R. WOOD, who had promised some suggestions, and said he would write to the Doctor to remind him of the pledge.

The Committee then adjourned.

SUICIDE AT THE WESTERN HOTEL.—CHARLES GILMORE, a young man who resided in Brooklyn, and nephew of Alderman GRIFFITH, of this City, committed suicide yesterday morning at the Western Hotel, in Cortlandt-street, where he had taken a room the night previous. At an early hour in the morning one of the chambermaids heard a moaning noise proceed from his room, and notified Mr. WINCHESTER, the proprietor, who went to the room and found GILMORE on the bed insensible.

Coroner PERRY held an inquest on the body yesterday afternoon, but no evidence was elicited showing the cause of the suicide. Among the papers found on the deceased was a petition for an appointment on the police. It was stated that a failure to receive the solicited appointment induced the act of self-destruction. A rumor prevailed that disappointment in a love affair was the impelling cause. The Jury rendered a verdict of "Suicide by taking laudanum." The deceased was unmarried, and resided with an uncle in Brooklyn.

Police Intelligence.

EMBEZZLING $2,000 IN MONEY AND GOODS—THE "MOST HONEST" CLERK THE CULPRIT.—A young German named Ferdinand Wehrnann, clerk in the wholesale fancy goods establishment of Messrs. Jolley & Tiers, No. 43 Maiden-lane, was arrested yesterday, charged with having embezzled from his employers $2,000, in money and goods. The accused has been clerk for Jolley & Tiers over two years, and until recently enjoyed their utmost confidence. It was noticed that goods occasionally were mysteriously missing, but not the slightest suspicion was entertained against Wehrnann. The firm had, indeed, such an exalted opinion of his integrity that, on his suggestion, they discharged two of their clerks as the probable culprits. As goods continued still to be missing, suspicion was at length aroused against Wehrnann, the "most honest" clerk in the establishment. When arrested the accused had on his person a choice stock of articles—the part product of one day's "haul"—which he had managed to slip unobserved during the day into his pocket. The case was so clear against him that he at once made a clean breast of the matter, and confessed that he had been constantly in the habit of pilfering since he entered the store.

Officers Patterson and King, of the Detective Police, who made the arrest, took their prisoner to the Police Head-quarters in Broome-street. He was here questioned as to the disposition of the goods he had stolen, when he stated that he gave the most of them to a man named Abram Helleman, of No. 528 Pearl-street, to sell. This man sold them to different parties in the City, and they divided the proceeds. He confessed to having stolen nearly $2,000 worth of goods, and disposed of them in this way; he stated, besides, that he had embezzled a considerable amount of money belonging to the firm. Wehrnann is only 27 years of age, has a quick business way with him, and by his unusually frank and cordial manner, wins the confidence of those with whom he comes in contact. He boarded in Beach-street, but a little "piping" by the officers discovered that he had some fast associates, and spent his evenings in fast and expensive pastimes, much too expensive for his limited salary. Both Wehrnann and Helleman were detained for examination.

BURGLARY IN BAXTER-STREET—A NEST OF THIEVES OVERHAULED.—At a late hour, Thursday night, the clothing store of Abraham Isadore, No. 18 Baxter-street, was broken into by burglars, and $300 worth of clothing stolen. The Police of the Sixth Ward, on being notified of the burglary, at once proceeded to No. 21 Baxter-street, a noted den of thieves, and took six men into custody whom they found there, on suspicion of being the burglars. The arrested parties gave their names as Dominick Waters, Wm. Dryan, Anthony Ganyhan, John Nugent, Geo. Watson, Wm. Atlee and Charles Powell. They were taken before Justice OSBORN and committed for examination.

FURTHER VICTIMS.—Complaints are daily received at the office of the Police Superintendent of parties victimized by Henry S. Lassing, the young man arrested a few days since for palming off worthless checks on country produce dealers, under pretence that he had been sent to purchase horse feed for the Consolidated Stage Company of this City. Two complaints were received yesterday—one from A. Cook & Co., of Bridgeport, Conn., whom he swindled out of $179, and one from the Iron Bank of New-Jersey, who cashed a check of his for $250, on the Broadway Bank. Lassing would make a purchase to a small amount, give a check for $250, and pocket the cash balance. It is presumed that he has swindled a large number.

A BOLD PROCEEDING.—As two young men, at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, were passing up Broadway, in front of the City Hospital, five or six pickpockets suddenly surrounded them and made a dive for their watch-fobs. Mr. French, one of the young men, had his watch and chain stolen before he comprehended what the proceeding fairly meant. The rogues speedily decamped. Young French and his companion at once related the fact of the robbery to the Deputy Superintendant, when the latter dispatched some officers to hunt up the audacious rascals. They arrested one fellow, whom the young men recognized as being among the gang that surrounded them.

FLOUR THIEVES.—Three young Italians, giving their names as Conrad Cosack, Josepho Carmenton and Clement Beacho, were arrested yesterday morning in the First Ward, for stealing flour. When arrested they had laid in a stock of over 60 pounds of flour. They were locked up for examination.

Coroners' Inquests.

THE DEATH IN A BATHING-HOUSE.—Coroner GAMBLE held an inquest yesterday on the body of the man reported in Friday's TIMES as having died suddenly in the People's Bathing-House, No. 141 Mott-street. The name of the deceased proved to be MARCUS LEIPSICKER, a Prussian, 41 years of age, who resided in Greenwich-street. The evidence showed that he died from serous apoplexy, and a verdict was rendered accordingly.

DEATH FROM INFLAMMATION.—An inquest was held yesterday by Coroner HILLS, at No. 195 East Twelfth street, on the body of THOS. DUFFY. It was rumored that he had died from taking medicine wrongly administered to him by a physician. The evidence showed that death ensued from inflammation of the lungs, and a verdict was thus rendered.

FALL THROUGH A HATCHWAY.—An inquest was held yesterday on the body of THOS. H. GIBSON, who fell, on Thursday, through the hatchway of the store No. 25 Park-row. A verdict was rendered of accidental death. The deceased was 32 years of age, and leaves a wife and two children in Brooklyn.

FELL DOWN STAIRS.—Coroner GAMBLE held an inquest, yesterday, at the City Hospital, on the body of JOHN A. WILKINS, reported in Friday's TIMES as having fallen down stairs, at his residence, No. 62 Reade-street. The medical testimony proved that death was the result of congestion of the brain.

GIRLS GOING WEST.—A large company of unemployed working girls left the Branch Office of the Children's Aid Society, Wednesday afternoon, for homes in the West, under the charge of Mr. B. R. BARLOW, Superintendent. Dressmakers, tailoresses, book-folders, pen and pencil makers, &c., composed the party. They were neat of appearance, without gaudiness, and exhibited without exception cheerfulness, and a happy anticipation in their look and manner. The two companies that have preceded them, are now in good homes in the West, secure from the perils of the City, and from the actual poverty and suffering which depressed them. The incidents which sometimes occur at the Office as they are leaving are sadly interesting. Several of these poor girls, unable to pay even the porterage on their trunks, were assisted. One young woman on receiving money for this purpose could not repress tears. A gentleman present, who was much affected by the whole scene, inquired the occasion of it. She hesitated, and turned away; but upon being pressed to explain, she replied, "My marriage ring is at the pawnbroker's!" "For how much is it pledged?" he inquired, when she said, still in tears, "for two shillings, a long time since." The gentleman gave her fifty cents, and she returned shortly after, showing the ring. A party of homeless boys from the Central Office accompanied the working girls, under the guardianship of Mr. BARLOW.

A CARD.

Unhappily, at this season of the year, all pulmonary diseases progress rapidly, and can only be arrested by prompt and radical treatment. What is today but a simple malady, and easily cured, will, in all probability, a few weeks or months hence, have passed to a stage beyond the reach of all medical skill. Knowing these facts, and that our treatment (by the direct applications of remedies to the diseased air passage and lungs) is the only one by which catarrhal, bronchial and consumptive diseases can be effectually removed, we are most desirous that our patients should permit no interruption to occur in their use of the remedies under which they are advancing, in most instances, steadily, toward recovery. We are not insensible to the severity of the times, and have, too, a high sense of our responsibilities, and too deep a concern for the reputation of inhalation to permit any personal considerations to weigh against our duty to those who commit their cases to our care. We therefore adopt this public means of requesting our patients and others to make known to us their wants and wishes, in the assurance that to the utmost of our ability we will afford them every facility for continuing or commencing treatment in these times of pecuniary stringency.

THE ELECTION HAT.—Notwithstanding the illegality of wagers, people will bet on the election, and the favorite risk among those who indulge in the practice is undoubtedly the hat. LONG ISLAND.

BURGLAR CAPTURED—ONE FIRED AT.—Officer CRAFTS, of the Second Precinct, Brooklyn, on Wednesday night arrested a man named DOLAN, charged with robbing the shop of THOMAS DENIKE, in Charles-street. On Thursday night he attempted to arrest two of DOLAN's accomplices, and, after a hard fight, succeeded in arresting one who gave his name as PETER ADAMS. The thief who escaped enleavored to rescue his companion, when Officer CRAFTS fired two shots at him, but unfortunately without bringing down his game. The property stolen was found in a house occupied by the prisoner, by Officer CRAFTS.

WILLIAMSBURG DISPENSARY.—During the month of November 360 cases were treated in this institution. Males, 121; females, 239, for the following

Diseases—Injuries, 23; minor surgery, 74; nervous, 36; abdomen, 70; skin, 16; rheumatism, 5; eye and ear, 14; abscess, 10; heart, lungs and throat, 69; urinary, 3; fevers, 28; vaccinated, 12.

Patients under 1 year, 11; between 1 and 5, 46; between 5 and 10, 36; between 10 and 30, 142; over 30, 123.

Six hundred and seventy-seven prescriptions were gratuitously dispensed.

☞ The Sabbath Schools connected with the Methodist Episcopal Churches in Brooklyn have just completed a neat place of worship, on Wyckoff, near Smith-street, at an expense of $5,000, to be used by Germans. The Society has formerly worshiped in a house on Atlantic-street. The dedication exercises will take place next Sunday, at 3 o'clock P. M.

RIVER THIEVES ARRESTED.—On Thursday night a party of river thieves stole 10 barrels of beef from the ship Enterprise, lying in the Atlantic Basin. Yesterday Officer FORAN, of the Third Precinct, Brooklyn, arrested three men, named CHARLES WILSON, ALBERT PETERS, and CHARLES SNOWBERGER, for being concerned in the robbery. The property was recovered.

BROOKLYN MERCANTILE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.—Five hundred persons have already joined this Association, and $7,300 has been received by the Committee. The Messrs. APPLETONS, of New-York, have notified the Committee of their intention to present the Society with many valuable books.

ACCIDENTS.—JOHN O'NEILL was seriously injured in CAMPBELL & TRAVER'S Oil Factory, Front-street, Brooklyn, by a dumb-waiter falling upon him.

A SON of M. MCNAMARRA, residing in Main-street, Brooklyn, was severely burnt by hot water yesterday, while playing near a stove.

☞ A house of prostitution on First-street, near North Seventh, E. D., of Brooklyn, was broken up Thursday night, and the inmates arrested by officers LEE and JACOBS, of the Sixth Precinct.

RESIGNED.—Captain GUISCHARD, of the Fifth Precinct, Brooklyn, has tendered his resignation to the Police Commissioners.

BURGLARY.—A burglar entered the house of P. MCCULLY, No. 21 North Seventh-street, Brooklyn, early yesterday morning, and stole $20.

NEW-JERSEY.

CAMPHENE ACCIDENT.—JANE WETMANN, a domestic employed with a family in Sussex-street, was badly injured on Thursday night, by the bursting of a camphene lamp, which was knocked from her hand by a child playing in the room. Her injuries are severe, but it is thought she will recover.

FRIDAY, Dec. 11—P. M.

The City Banks on and after To-MORROW will do away with all distinction in their payments. The resumption will then be literally complete, as it already is and has been since the first of the month, practically so. The movement, we presume, will be made equally unanimous and without effort. The community will know no difference, as it is really one without a distinction, in the present ruling of Gold in the market. The matter has been entirely left to the voluntary action of the Banks themselves. The Country Banks of the State having already returned to the daily redemption of
